SYNOPSIS.

[Capt. Skote Gregg, skipper of a coasting packet drops into Newport Harbor on one of his trips and visits his cousins. During the evening he meets one of their neighbors, a fascinating widow, who seems considerably impressed by the honest mariner. The skipper is a bachelor, but he has been engaged for more than thirty years to a spinster down at his home, a patient woman who has resolved that she will care for her old parents so long as they live and will not marry. Several months after meeting the widow the skipper stops again at Newport and shows the amiable woman so much attention that his cousin's wife—staunchly devoted to the earlier attachment of the skipper—vows that she will write home and tell all about his foolishness if he doesn't remember his vows. But the skipper is smitten hard and on his next trip determines to stop at Newport and see the widow by stealth, even though she lives next door to his cousin. The crew and cook of the schooner—all comprised in one boy—is much offended at this decision of the skipper who hints that he may remain several days. The "crew" is impatient to get home to his own love, and the notion of delay tortures him. He rebels when the skipper orders him to shore to do an errand, but by threats the captain obliges him to do his bidding. They lower the yawl over the side and the "crew" rows the love-sick skipper to the Newport dock.]

EVENING sky was purple and a pair of moon hung in the west. Skipper Skote Gregg leaned back in the yawl's stern, straddling his legs so that the swashing bilge water wouldn't wet his Sunday best trousers. He looked up at the moon and at the stars thrusting through the mellow haze and felt romantic. People usually feel romantic when they are at Newport.

"Beautiful ev'nin', hain't it, Seth?" murmured the skipper.

"Good enough," growled Seth, who was rowing stolidly. He was thinking how this evening would seem if he were down on Cove Ledge in Hobbs Harbor, looking out across the trail of the moon on the sea and then looking into the Sims girl's bright eyes. He gritted his teeth at the reflection.

"How long do ye p'tend ye're goin' to stay here this trip?" asked Seth, finding it difficult to speak to the skipper without swearing at him. The captain pushed the pasteboard frame of his made-up bow more firmly up under his collar and said calmly:

"It sort of depends, Seth."

"I should think ye'd be in some hurry to git this cargo back home," urged Seth. "You know when we sailed for York, Burkett said he was most out of flour and bran middlin's."

"Wal, flour and bran middlin's hain't the only thing there is in this world, Seth," remarked the skipper dreamily.

"And the Susan P. Gregg won't be the only packet on between Hobbs Harbor and New York unless we git round some time 'ruther with the things people are waitin' for." Seth's tone was distinctly indignant.

"Look here, ye freaked young shrimp," roared the skipper, "are ye tryin' to boss me 'round? I'll throw ye overboard in about ha'f jiffy."

Seth pulled at his oars and made no reply.

"What do you mean by bracin' up to me in such a sassy way?" demanded Capt. Skote.

"I was only sayin' what I thought," said the boy. "It's more for your good than mine. Longer ye be on the way the more pay I git. But tain't the same way with the folks who are waitin' for goods."

"Yas, I know about who it is that's waitin' for goods 't you're thinkin' about," said the skipper drily. "There's a bale of live veal that's consigned to the Sims girl that ye're thinkin' about mostly. That veal will reach her in damaged condition if ye hain't more careful about how ye talk back to me."

There was silence. Seth had no reply. The skipper after a little pause went on.

"I see ye are pretty ugly and set about this matter, Seth and perhaps ye are thinkin' that when ye git back to Hobbs Harbor ye will blow the thing out of revenge. Are ye thinkin' that, Seth?"

"I hain't thought nothin' about it," replied Seth sullenly.

"I know ye've got it in your mind," said the skipper, "and ye're mad enough to shoot your mouth off—I know that. I've offered to help you along in your matter all friendly like and I'll do it, Seth. But if ye play me dirty I'll do the same for you and when I start in ye'll wish ye hadn't."

They ran the yawl far up a dock between long wharves and scrambled to the plank walk that led to the street. They walked far up town in silence. The dark had come down and the skipper dodged the patches of light thrown by the street arc lamps. Finally Capt. Gregg halted by the corner of a shrubbery-bordered lawn. "Her house is the second one up that first street to the right," he explained to Seth. "I'm goin' to wait here."

"Now for your sailin' orders! Ye understand, Seth, that if my cousin's folks know I'm in the place or am callin' on the widder they'll make a lot of trouble. They're messy folks, that's what they are. They want to run things in Hobbs Harbor just the same's though they lived there yet."

"Now I want you to lay 'longside the widder's door and give her a hail for me. Find out if the coast's clear and if it is and she hain't got company from round the neighborhood that would be li'ble to blow on me, jest tell her that Cap'n Gregg will do himself the honor of callin' to pass the time of day. There! How's that sound?"

Seth started away without response. His face in the faint light from a distant lamp hung at the jaws as sulky as a bull-pup's visage.

"Hold on a minute," ordered the skipper. "In case it happens that any one else comes to the door and you can't see the widder don't let on who sent ye. There might have something happened in four months so that she hain't to home or somethin' else, ye never can tell what. I'll wait for ye at the end of this street, for I'll keep movin' so's not to attract suspicion."

Seth shuffled away. "Now mind," cautioned the skipper huskily, "don't give away nothin' to any one except the widder."

He watched the youth until he had turned into the street he had indicated. He saw him turn up the path toward the house and then Cap. Gregg went scuffling down the dark street, at the head of which he had been standing. He was determined to observe all caution. Five minutes passed. His nerves were in a quiver of expectation that was almost apprehension. Who could tell what might have happened to the widow in four months?

She might be receiving attentions from some other man! The thought made his heart drop like the plummet lead. He blamed himself now because he had conducted his wooing so leisurely and in such an indefinite manner. He realized that a man who has been engaged to be married for thirty years is not likely to realize that Cupid has wings. He takes too much for granted. He has looked on woman as a landmark, always there every time the sun rises. That was the way with Sophy, his affianced who lived down in Hobbs Harbor. But a pretty widow living in a city full of young men was far from being Sophy Maxwell, whom all the bachelors of Hobbs Harbor tacitly avoided as one already disposed of. Furthermore, the widow had of course been told by that meddlesome cousin's wife that he was engaged and he had never hinted to the charming Belle in any way that his inclinations were drifting in another direction.

On all these things and others as harassing did the skipper ponder while he stood there in the shadows waiting for the return of his ambassador.

All at once there was the rapid tick-tick-tick of running feet on the gravel of the walk. The skipper faced about and out of the gloom burst Seth fleeing like a rabbit.

"Run," he gasped and away he went. The skipper, sudden fear clutching his heart, coursed along behind. Occasionally he spurted up abreast Seth and hissed: "What is it?" But Seth only put on more speed and gasped again, "Run!"

In this way they made the dock, running in the dark places, jogging along in a trot when there were people to observe them. They tumbled into the yawl and Seth, floundering with the oars, cuffing gobs of sea-water up onto the skipper in his excitement, managed to pull out into the harbor and head away for the dim smudge of the Susan.

At regular intervals the skipper still hissed his query at Seth. "What's the trouble?" But Seth had not deigned to reply. Now when they were half way out to the schooner the youth let out a mighty blurt of breath and crossing his oars under one arm wiped his forehead with a shaking forefinger.

"Woof!" he panted, "I'm plumb beat out."

"What in sanup's the matter, Seth?" croaked the skipper.

"Hah-h-h!" puffed Seth. "That was the closest squeak I ever had in all my life." He stared back over the water behind them. "Ye don't hear anything as though any one was a-followin' us, do ye?" he said to the captain.

"I don't hear anything," replied the skipper looking around apprehensively. "But what's the matter with ye, anyway?"

"Ye see I went up to the door," Seth commenced.

"Yes—yes—go on!"

"I rung the bell."

"Yes!"

"A man came to the door!"

"A man!"

"Yas, that's it—a man."

"What's wanted?" says he.

"I want to speak to the Widder Belle Foster," says I.

"Hain't no sech woman here," says he. Then he grinned—say, he looked seven feet high, that man did—and he had a red face and his voice sounded like a coffee mill. Wal, he smiled and says he. 'She hain't Widder Foster now—she's my wife. If ye want to see her step in.'

"No thank ye," says I, 'I've got to be goin'.

I guess there hain't no need to see her."

"Married!" gurgled the skipper, "married!"

"That's it!" Seth replied cheerfully.

"What a blasted fool a man is to put his dependence on a woman," growled the skipper.

Seth resumed: "Wal, that man he says, 'I guess not—I' he says after me. 'What did ye come here after, anyway?' 'Nothin'," says I. 'Ye lie,' says he. 'Nothin' much,' says I. Aw, say, he was the biggest man I ever see. He grabbed me by the neck and he jammed me right down on the door steps. 'Own up,' says he, 'who sent ye? If you don't I'll—and he gritted his teeth at me."

"Did ye—did—" the skipper stammered, aghast.

"It sort of come right out of me before I thought," moaned Seth. "I couldn't help it." The skipper raised a loose boat seat and glared at Seth as he brandished the weapon. "I'm a good mind to kill ye," roared Gregg.

"He scart me so I couldn't help it—ye hadn't ought to have sent me," Seth whined. "I hain't good at bluffin', and ye know it. Wal, when I said who sent me and that he was down the street, the big man dropped me and started into the house for his hat and revolver, so he said. And I run. When I turned the corner he was jest comin' out on the jump. He was after you. He knows who you be. I shouldn't wonder if he come out here to the schooner." Again Seth bent to the oars.

The skipper seemed to think that Newport harbor wasn't safe for him. As soon as they were aboard he ordered Seth to the windlass. The anchor was tripped and ten minutes later the Susan was drifting down with the tide.

All the next day and the next and the next, the skipper stood at the wheel and varied his sulphurous comments on Seth's "dum foolishness," with laments on the fickleness of woman. Now that the widow was gone from him he seemed to have the idea that somehow or other she had been promised to him and was his property—such is the unreasonableness of a man in love. Seth maintained silence.

When the Susan drew near the home port the skipper, softened by thoughts of home, seemed to forget his rancor at the manner in which Seth had betrayed him to the new husband. He admitted to Seth that perhaps he had done the best he knew how. Then he made up for the concession by launching into new invective against the widow.

They had sighted the Nubble lighthouse and were well in toward Hobbs Harbor one afternoon when Seth interrupted the skipper's monotonous oration on the subject of false woman. Gregg had finally reached a point where he declared the unalterable opinion that a man couldn't trust any woman. For his part, he said, he was glad that the widow had got married because now he was safe from her deceit. He had found her out in time.

"She would probably have fooled you latter on, anyway," suggested Seth.

"Them kind of women is bound to," said the skipper.

"Hain't ye a bit sorry ye've got red of her?" asked Seth.

"No, sir," cried the skipper. "I consider it an act of Providence that I didn't git tangled up with her. I kind of lost my head there for a little but I'm over it now."

"Ye never'll be sorry ye didn't git her?" persisted Seth.

"Never," said the skipper, "and so ye don't want to ever say anything round here about the matter, nohow."

"You bet I won't," agreed Seth. "I hain't that kind. But say, Cap. Gregg, I'm awful glad to hear you say that ye're glad ye hain't hitched up with that woman. I allus did have the idea that city women wasn't fit for wives. I reckoned ye'd be sorry some time. Now I'll claim the credit of gittin' ye out of the scrape."

"Ye will, hey?" demanded the skipper, looking at Seth with wonder in his eyes.

"Huh huh!" smiled Seth, jerking his chin down.

"What do ye mean?"

"Now that ye say ye're glad it's over and you are out of the trap that woman set for ye, I'll own up. There wa'n't any man there that night!"

"What!?"

"Naw, wa'n't no man there. I didn't knock on the door at all."

"How did ye happen not to?" asked the skipper with strange quiet in his tones.

"When ye said ye hadn't heard from her for four months it put an idea into my head," confessed Seth. "I jest made it all up. So I claim the credit of gittin' ye out of the scrape." He looked at the skipper for applause.

The skipper made the wheel of the Susan fast with two half hitches. Then he rolled his sleeves above his elbows, grabbed a knotted piece of painter rope and advanced toward Seth with a menace in his white face that the cook and crew had never seen there before.

"Wuh-wuh-what ye goin' to do?" gasped Seth.

"I'm goin' to kill ye right here in sight of home," grated the skipper.

"But ye said ye was glad ye was out of it," blubbered Seth.

"Jim swat your hide to tophet," roared the skipper, "you'll drive me ravin', distracted. Jest as soon's I've killed ye I shall give myself up to the authorities. They'll acquit me after I tell 'em my story—I hain't a feard of that."

He dashed on the youth. But Seth with a yell of terror leaped into the mainmast shrouds and clambered up the ratlines. The skipper pursued him to the trees. But the nimble and younger man shinned the topmast until he was out of reach. There he clung turning a frightened face at the skipper raving below. But the Susan's head began to pay off and the captain was obliged to scurry back to the wheel to prevent the old craft from bowling into the Nubble Ledge. From there on into the harbor the exigencies of navigation were such that Gregg had no opportunity to attempt the capture of Seth. The latter sat disconsolately on the cross trees listening to the reviling threats of the skipper who yelled a new proposition for punishment at him every time the wheel was twirled.

When the Susan hove to off the wharf the loungers noted with surprise that the skipper dropped his own anchor and let run the sheets and braces himself while the crew, the cook and the first mate dangled his feet from the cross-trees.

The rumor of this singular spectacle spread up into the village and while the skipper was engaged in furling sails the folks commenced to saunter down the wharf to discover what was the trouble on board the Susan P. Gregg just in port from York city.

The First Soprano.

A Story of Easter.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY M. B. THRASHER.

murmur of talk which filled the church gallery while the members of the choir waited for the Easter rehearsal to begin suddenly hushed.

Annette Harbor- ough had just entered the church below, and was coming toward the stairs that led up into the gallery.

Each person in the choir looked at somebody else, and wondered what would happen when Annette reached the gallery and found Gertrude Wright sitting in the first soprano's seat. Even the organist, running over the accompaniment to an anthem, lost her place and played two notes wrong.

For the last two years the church in Center Applefield had been twisted and torn by dissensions in its choir, just as one of the trees for which the town was named might have been twisted and torn by a hurricane.

The minister, good man, to whom fortunately both factions declared themselves devotedly attached, had gone to bed more than once made sick at heart and body by the quarrel. "They'll be the death of me yet, I really do believe," he sighed one day as his wife bound hot cloths around his aching head.

"It's a pity," she answered, giving utterance in the privacy of their bedroom to feelings long repressed in public, "that they can't get up their voices as easy as they do their backs. We'd have wonderful singing if they did."

Annette Harborough had been the church's first soprano for years. So many years, in fact, that if she had been a less well-to-do woman folks would have called her an old maid. Being that she was the richest woman in town they said, "Annette's getting along in years."

The choir in Center Applefield of course was an unsalaried one. People sang in it from love of the church—some of them. Others sang for honor, and the opportunity which sitting up in the high old-fashioned gallery gave them to look down on their less distinguished relations sitting in the pews below. Probably Annette Harborough would have said that the first of these was the consideration that influenced her, and would have been honestly unconscious how much the latter entered into the matter. To the childless, unconsciously lonely woman, living in the big old Harborough house, her music—especially her church music—had come to be her chief interest in life, an interest deeper and more intense than even her most intimate friends—or she herself, for that matter—realized. Her voice, not particularly strong, but singularly pure and high, had dominated the other voices in the choir just as her will and wishes had overruled those of the other singers. Through all these years she had set in the front seat at the right hand of the middle of the gallery, the dividing line between the sopranos, and, between them, the basses and the tenors.

Until two years before that she had never had a suggestion of a rival, and then the rival had come from a quarter in which she would never have looked for one, for to women of thirty—or older, some said—girls of seventeen are only little girls.

Gertrude Wright had been a pretty little girl with a fresh, childish voice. Annette herself had suggested that she be taken into the choir. Looking back, now, she felt this fact to be an added grievance. At seventeen, Gertrude was a beautiful woman, with a voice stronger than Annette's, if not so sweet and high.

There were some, too, who said that the choir's leader did not always sing true, now. Only that Sunday morning they had been talking of that in the choir, with reference to an earlier rehearsal of the Easter music.

"Where the soprano goes up, there, on 'Christ the Lord is risen on high,' she certainly did flat," the organist said, playing over the strain as she spoke. "She sang that 'high,' half a note too low."

"Probably she wanted to play high, low, j—" began John Amidon, who sang bass; but the organist, who was a woman with a strong sense of the propriety of things, cut him off short with—

"John Amidon! You stop! Don't you know you are in the meeting house?"

John Amidon was a young man. What was more, he was very much in love with Gertrude Wright, and did not care who knew it.

What made the trouble so serious for the church was that Deacon Wright, Gertrude's father, was the richest man in town, just as Annette was the richest woman. The two together paid a good half of all the church expenses, and the rest of the society realized that if either became hopelessly estranged it meant that they themselves must go down into their own pockets to make up the loss. Deacon Wright openly asserted that his daughter, now nineteen and radiant in all the glory of young womanhood's strength and vitality, was the best singer in the choir, and ought to have the first place. "Annette Harborough's too old to sing," he declared.

More than one church meeting called for other purposes had ended by dividing over this question. So far the Harborough faction had kept control of the music committee of the society, but at a meeting held the night before this rehearsal they had been, for the first time, outvoted. At this meeting the chairman of the committee had been instructed to notify Miss Wright that she was the choir leader and as such was to take the leading soprano's seat, and when the Sunday morning rehearsal came he had done so.

The gallery door opened and Annette stood in the doorway. The singers in their seats tried to think of something to talk about, and failed, and were dumb. Only the organist, who suddenly had found the notes before her so difficult that she was obliged to bend forward to read them, broke the silence with the organ's sound.

The gaze of the woman in the doorway traveled past the singers to her seat, and to the woman sitting in it. The place next it, the second place, was vacant.

"What does this mean?" she asked, facing the situation promptly. Her clear, high voice made every word distinctly heard above the organ.

The chairman of the music committee—one of the tenor singers—coughed and rose in his seat.

The organist stopped playing.

"I have been instructed," the man said, getting the words out with difficulty, "to inform you, Miss Harborough, that the music committee of the society has voted that after this Miss Wright will be the leading soprano. A majority of the committee," he hastened to add.

The man sat down. "She never answered a word," he told his wife afterward, when he got home that day, "but she looked like death; and she just turned 'round and went down stairs, and out."

The choir watched the woman cross the church below them in silence. Folks in the congregation said the singing went lame that day, and those that did not know what had happened, wondered if Annette Harborough was sick that she was not there.

Long past midnight, one night, some weeks after Easter, people in Center Applefield, sleeping soundly, stirred in bed, sleepily wondering what was the matter, and then sprang wide awake to know that some one in the road outside was shouting "Fire!" and that the church bell was being rung furiously. Streaming out into the village, half dressed men and bare-headed women, they found that it was the church itself that was on fire, and that the bell clanging in the tower was ringing its own knell.

There had been a church supper in the vestry that evening, and the fire had taken from the kitchen.

"Serves them just right," said an aged deacon's wife, as she brought out an armful of hymnbooks and laid them down on the pew cushions that her husband had brought out before her. "I've always said they'd no business to hitch a kitchen on a meeting house."

The bell had ceased. The rope had burned off, and the flames already were wrapping around the spire. The bell itself might fall at any minute. Everything movable had been brought out of the church, and the people could only stand about in the glare of the flames now and watch the building go. More than one was crying, for the old house of worship had grown fast into the lives of many there. Some were thinking of weddings and funerals which had taken place there, which had meant much to them.

Suddenly a woman screamed and pointed upward to the gallery window, from which the sash had been torn out.

Annette Harborough stood in the open space, grasping the window frame with one hand.

"Jump!" cried half a dozen men, running forward to stand beneath the window.

But while they were still too far away to have caught her if she had done as they had bid, the woman in the window fainted, let go her hold on the window frame, and sank back into the gallery of the burning building.

"Gertrude! Shall I go?"

In time, the interval that passed between the question and its answer could have been measured only by seconds, but it was long enough for John Amidon and the girl beside him to see again in memory the face of the woman that Sunday, as she had stood in the doorway of the gallery.

"Yes, John. Go."

Pulling the shawl from her shoulders she wrapped it around his head, bending forward as she did so to kiss him, regardless of who might see her.

A dozen voices shouted to the man to come back, and when he did not heed them, were hushed as their owners watched breathlessly to see if he came out again from the burning building into which he had rushed.

The entire structure was on fire now. At any moment the bell might fall, bringing down the spire with it; and the gallery was just beneath.

But the bell did not fall. At least not until after the young man had come back into the open air, bringing the senseless woman with him, and had laid her down upon a pile of cushions.

Afterward, when they were building the new church, and Annette Harborough gave three thousand dollars toward the expense, folks said the money must be a thank offering.

"She seems to have forgotten all about the trouble in the choir," they said, "and she sings again in meeting now just as hearty as anybody can." While the new church was being built the society held services in the town hall, and as there was no gallery there they had congregational singing.

In the fall the women of the society frequently gathered in the unfinished building to sew carpets, make pew cushions, and help the work along in similar feminine ways. One day Annette and Gertrude found themselves working side by side, and, for a moment, left alone in the vestry. They had never spoken since that spring day so long before.

The older woman looked hastily around to see that no one could hear.

"You saved my life," she said, breathing short and quick. "I want to tell you that I wasn't worthy of it. I set the church on fire myself. I meant to burn up in it, I was so miserable, but at the last minute my courage failed me. I felt I was too wicked to die. Then after all, I would, wicked or not, if it hadn't been for you. I was crazy, I guess. Only you, who are young and have everything, didn't know what it meant for me to give up my singing. It was all I had in the world."

"I didn't then," the younger woman said, "not at first. But when I saw you standing in the window that night, somehow I knew."

Then, just as she had kissed John Amidon that night in the fire's glare, she bent forward and kissed the woman working beside her.

They had meant to get into the new church for Christmas, but the furnaces were late in coming, and when they did come, Curt Aldrich, the only man in town who could set them, broke his leg, and what with one hindrance and another, the building was so long in being completed that the first service held in it was to be on Easter Sunday.

"Who'll sing the solo in the anthem?" asked the organist, when the subject of Easter music was brought up at a sewing circle.

"Annette," said Gertrude Wright promptly, Miss Harborough herself not being present.

"Is Annette going to sing again?" somebody asked.

"Yes," said Gertrude, and then, blushing beautifully, she added, "she's promised to sing at my wedding, Easter week."

TWO men stood on top the levee which restrains the Mississippi river from flooding miles and miles of the rich Yazoo Delta. Far below them, for it was extreme low water, the Father of Waters slipped softly past the foot of the levee, and then shimmered in the wonderful sun-filled Southern air, a mile wide to where the Arkansas shore, sandy at the water's edge looked green and cool beneath the trees which grew farther up the bank.

Around a bend in this green wall, up stream,

Only a Postal

Send me no money, but simply write a postal for the book you want.

I will send with an order on your druggist to let you have 6 bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He will let you take it a month. If it cures, the cost will be $5.50. If it fails, he sends the bill to me. This remedy strengthens the inside nerve power that operates all vital organs. It brings back the only power that can make the organs do their duty. I have spent a lifetime on it.

I sometimes fail, but only when the trouble is organic—like cancer—causing a damage beyond repair. Such conditions are rare. My records show that 39 out of 40 who get those six bottles pay for them. Yet no druggist accepts a penny where the patient states that the treatment failed.

This offer is too fair to need argument. Your own druggist is the one who fulfills it. Won't you write me a postal to learn what I can do?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 304, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

something came in sight that looked like a big summer hotel floating down the river.

"What's that coming there?" one of the men asked.

"I reckon that all's Jim Remshaw's show boat," was the answer.

"What's a show boat?" the first speaker asked again.

The man of whom he had asked the question turned to look at him curiously. He, himself, was evidently a riverman. Tall, spare, broad-shouldered and straight, the rich brown tan on his face from his coal black hair down to where the loose collar of his blue flannel shirt rolled back from his strong neck showed that he had lived in the open air beneath a Southern sky.

"You all must be a stranger here," he said.

"Yes," said the other man. "I never was here before. I never saw the Mississippi river until today."

"I am a Northern man," he added, "a doctor by profession. I am taking a few weeks' rest, and am on my way to Mexico. I came around this way to visit a college friend of mine who is practicing in —" naming a town in the center of the state. "I found I had to wait here nearly half a day for a train so I am trying to see what I can of the place."

"Now I have answered your question," he went on, turning, with the shadow of a smile to the man beside him, "suppose you answer mine. Will you smoke?" handing out a cigar case.

"Don't care if I do," his companion said, accepting the proffered favor. "You asked about that boat. A show boat's a sort of floating theatre. You'll see what they're like when this one gets down here. She'll tie up to the bank right about where we are, I reckon. There's quite a lot of them on the river. Some of them run up the Red River. They're really two boats, you'll see. The one behind furnishes the power, and is a sort of hotel in which the performers and all the rest of them live. The boat ahead is the theatre, with a stage in one end, and seats—two tiers of them. This one coming will seat a thousand persons. She's one of the biggest on the river. It's an opera company she carries, good folks, too, some of them. Jim Remshaw's owned her only a couple of years. He bought her when old man Syms, who has been in the business for years, died."

The floating theater was near the town now, and the huge stern wheel behind the rear boat churned the yellow water into foam as it answered the signals of the man in the pilot house who was laboring to get the unwieldy craft up to the shore. The sound—one could hardly call it music—of a vociferous steam calliope on board which served to announce the show's arrival, called a good share of the town's population, white and black, to the top of the levee.

"James Y. Remshaw." The name was painted along the side of the forward boat, the big black letters standing out distinct against the boat's white side.

"Do you know that man—Remshaw?" the doctor asked of his companion.

"Some," was the laconic answer.

"Is he a native of these parts, do you know, or where did he come from?"

"He wasn't raised in these parts. I don't know where he came from," the river man answered; and then added a moment later with a sudden, repressed fury which made the man at his side, turn to look closely at him, "straight from hell, I reckon."

"You're a stranger to me," he said fiercely, as if in answer to the question in the other man's face, "but you're a doctor, and I never saw a good doctor yet that couldn't be trusted with other folks' troubles. I'm just dead with the misery that's in me. There's a woman on board that boat—a good woman, too—that I love better than my life itself; and she used to love me until that man came between us. I believe she loves me yet, in her heart, only she doesn't know it when he's round, he's got such a hold on her. She's acting and singing in one of the plays they give and he lets her think she's going to make a strike that way, but she isn't. She's no genius. I know that if I do love her. She's just a handsome woman, and a good woman, yet—God knows how long, though, if she can't be made to see what he is. Her home is in a river town not more than fifty miles above here. That was my home, too. We were going to be married. I've got a good bit of money saved up. I'm a river pilot. Then this show boat stopped there and Remshaw saw her. After that he never let up, every time he was there, until she joined his troop. That was a week ago."

"What made you ask about him?" he said suddenly. "Do you know anything about him?"

"If he is the man I think he is," the doctor answered, "I know he has a wife in New York, whom he deserted three years ago, when she was sick in a hospital there."

The blood left the riverman's bronzed face, until it seemed as if the coat of tan upon it was painted over dead white marble.

"Stranger," he said, "if you have a wife, or a sweetheart, for the sake of the love you bear to them, help me save this woman. If she knows what you know, I reckon she'll give him up, but if I just tell her she'll think I made up the story."

"It won't mean missing more than one train for you," he went on, "and it means missing my whole life if I lose her. I know it isn't an easy job I'm asking of you. If all the stories told about Jim Remshaw are true, he has killed a man for less than this."

"If this is the man I knew," said the doctor, "he had no love for me when he last saw me, but I doubt if he would know me now, meeting me here. Tell me what you want me to do."

The two men talked earnestly for a few minutes, screened, as they supposed, by the sound of the calliope from any danger of the people near them hearing what they were saying.

"Will you do it?" the pilot asked, at last.

"Yes," said the doctor.

The two men climbed down from the levee and walked away in the direction of the town.

The auditorium of the floating theater was well filled at that night's performance. The doctor sat well back in the audience, and near the wall. The heavily bearded man who sat beside him would never have been identified with the man who had been with him on the levee that day, so well had his disguise been planned. Along in the middle of the first act a young woman came on the stage in a minor part.

"That's her," the riverman whispered hoarsely. What he had said of her was true. She was beautiful, but sing or act she could not.

"There!" he added suddenly. "That's Remshaw at the side of the stage there, looking at her. Is he the man you know?"

"Yes," said his companion. "That is the man."

At the end of the first act the two men left the boat. Half an hour later they parted at the door of one of the saloons in the city, in which the pilot of the show boat was enjoying his lay off from duty. The man with the beard entered the saloon, and in no long time the two rivermen were drinking together.

At midnight, that night, Remshaw came up the gangplank on to the boat on which the troupe lived. He carried a small handbag with him. The show was over, the theater dark, and the actors gone to their rooms.

"Has Rast?" the pilot— "come on board yet?" Remshaw asked of a watchman who sat smoking at the head of the plank.

"No," said the man.

The owner of the showboat swore roundly. "He's drunk," he said. "I heard on shore he was 'most paralyzed in a saloon there an hour ago, and then went out. I've been looking for him but I can't find him." He sat down near the man, putting the bag down carefully beside him as he did so.

"Don't kick that bag," he said. "There's dynamite in it. The paper says the river's going to keep falling for the next few days anyway. If it gets much lower we'll likely have to blow out a snag or two somewhere, to

Miss Trundy—"Ha'nt."

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY HERMAN GRAY.

Copyright, 1902, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTER.

Squire Todd, widower for a number of years, decides to marry Widow Jetts. Miss Trundy, who has been the squire's housekeeper since his wife's death, is notified and volunteers to leave. The squire tells her he shall give her five hundred dollars, but she says she doesn't need it and will not take it.

ARRANGED, a few days before the wedding Miss Trundy bade good bye to the old house where she had labored so many years and moved her possessions to a cozy little cottage down the street.

She was really happy after she was well settled. No longer had she the care of a family on her mind. She was free to go and come as she liked.

There was no worry about her modest future. On their part the Squire and his bride seemed to be as well satisfied and settled. Such all round happiness was too much for the village. The matter was discussed in its various phases at the regular meeting of the Current Events club, and the English Literature club stood Browning off at one side for the day while they paid due attention to the mean way old Ben Todd had used Maria Trundy who had slaved and toiled for him and his all her life long, only to be turned out of her home at last.

The next day several women in the village dropped around to call on Miss Trundy. They sounded her cautiously on her feelings in regard to the Squire's marriage. She expressed her entire happiness and deep content in her new home.

"She's awful sly about it," the callers reported to inquiring friends, "but you can see that she is just eatin' her heart out."

At last Mrs. Johnson, the wife of the lawyer who was the Squire's rival in the village, went around to call on Miss Trundy. "I think something ought to be done to inform that poor lone woman about her rights," declared Mrs. Johnson. "My husband says that no woman ever had a better chance to sue for breach of promise than Maria Trundy and fur's we're concerned we're willin' to help her."

But it required a week of constant argument on the part of Mrs. Johnson to convince Miss Trundy that she had been used ill. At last she admitted that—yes, at one time she had hoped, —well, just imagined that perhaps the Squire might ask her to take the head of his household as his wife.

"Of course you thought so—of course you did," declared Mrs. Johnson. "He led you to believe so right along. You didn't calculate on bein' an old maid, did you? Of course not. But I know of lots of good men who would have shined up to you if they hadn't thought you were promised to the Squire. He has just gone to work and spoiled your whole life for you, and then when you are old he has turned you out for a younger woman. He ought to be rid on a rail out of town. The folks in the village here are just as mad as they can stick. They're all your friends!"

Miss Trundy had nothing to do except ponder on the matter that had been suggested to her by Mrs. Johnson. With that lady at her elbow pretty constantly to put into her mind things that she couldn't think of on her own account, Miss Trundy came at last to look on herself as a very unfortunate woman. She commenced to pity herself for her lonely state. From that stage to developing resentment against the one to whom she ascribed her single blessedness was an easy step. She finally agreed with Mrs. Johnson that the squire had used her just as mean as a man could use a woman.

But at one thing Miss Trundy stuck. She wouldn't bring suit on the ground of breach of promise. Even Lawyer Johnson's arguments could not bring her over to that resolve. It was disappointing to Mrs. Johnson that the rest of the villagers but Miss Trundy stood firm. She declared that however she might feel toward the Squire she didn't want to hurt the feelings of the new Mrs. Todd. "She has always used me just as nice as one woman could use another," she avowed, "and I hain't goin' to root up a scandal and drag her into it."

Two days later Mrs. Johnson told her that Mrs. Todd had said to a party from whom it came straight, that Maria Trundy "had figured every way she knew how to catch the Squire and had even made eyes at him before his first wife died." That shaft hurt. Miss Trundy vowed that she did not believe a word of it and yet she lay awake half the night and thought the matter over. In the morning she decided that probably Mrs. Todd really did say it.

Mrs. Johnson came around after breakfast. "What are you goin' to do about that matter, Miss Trundy?" she inquired. "The whole village is watchin' you and waitin' for you to take some action to stop their mouths. And if you've got any spunk at all you'll do it."

"I've thought it over," said Maria with her mouth quivering, "and I hain't goin' to say a word to either of 'em. The Squire knows how hard I worked for his interests. I believe that today he has horror of conscience because he turned me out to make room for another woman."

"Well, what are you goin' to do?" persisted Mrs. Johnson.

"I'm goin' to ha'nt the both of them," declared Maria solemnly.

"You're goin' to what—t—t?" cried the lawyer's wife.

"The Good Book says to treat well them as do despitely use you," said Miss Trundy. "I hain't goin' to work and try to hurt the Squire and his wife with the law. That wouldn't be Christian. But I mean to hold the errors of their ways before them both in this life and in the life to come. As long as I stay on earth I shall ha'nt them and when I am laid away in the cold ground my spirit will still la'nt them. I shall be an uncompaining martyr. And I know that God will touch their hard hearts through me."

"Well of all things!" ejaculated Mrs. Johnson. "What do you mean to do?"

"What do I mean to do?" echoed the spinster.

Her eyes were directed through her little window and she saw the Squire and his bride coming down the sidewalk arm in arm. "I'll show you what I mean to do," she said, her lips tightening straight across. Miss Trundy threw her shawl about her shoulders in prim folds, put on her close bonnet and went out to the sidewalk. She stood just inside her gate and when the Squire and Mrs. Todd passed they tipped her a pleasant nod and a good-morning. Miss Trundy did not reply but the couple were engrossed in their conversation and did not notice that omission. After they had strolled past Miss Trundy fell in behind and trailed them at a distance of a few feet. As the procession passed through the village it attracted a bit of attention but not as much as it did the next day when the people had been informed by the tongue of gossip that Maria Trundy had constituted herself a spook in the flesh to haunt the new happiness of the Squire and his bride. On the first day the Squire scarcely noticed the familiar presence of Maria. He was used to having her about. But on the second day something in the smiling visages along the street informed him that "things were doing". At the door of his office, as he was about to take leave of his wife, he whirled round and accosted Miss Trundy who stood there grimly at a distance of a few feet.

"Mari! what in the name of sanup are you following us around in this way for?"

"Let your own false heart tell you," boomed the majestic and menacing Maria in her deepest contralto. Then she turned away and left them.

"Maria acted queer for some weeks before she left our house," said the Squire to his astonished spouse. "I wouldn't be surprised if she is touched just a little. Old maids get that way."

But that particular old maid grew troublesome before the week was over. Every time the Squire and his wife ventured out of doors she was at their heels. And as she refused to hold any conversation with the angry old man he couldn't understand what it all meant. Miss Trundy had left his house in the best spirits and with a perfect understanding existing between them. She knew that she was mentioned in his will. Yet here she was chasing behind like a Hecate. She ambled at their heels when they went to church, to lodge, to the store or for a stroll. All the people were at the doors as they passed in singular procession.

At last the Squire's wife came home from every trip through the village, sobbing with hysterical indignation. She demanded that the Squire lock up this madwoman who was making existence a burden. But the Squire, remembering the years of past service, was not willing to treat Maria harshly. He made careful inquiries. He studied the causes leading up to this obsession that was haunting him.

And then he sprung the biggest sensation the village had ever known. For he stood right up in church at the conclusion of the sermon one Sunday and commenced to talk. Grim and stiff and uncompromising, Maria had sat just behind him during the service. She as well as all the rest of the people present gasped when the Squire commenced his little oration. And all the folks were there, for congregations had been large since the "ha'nt" had commenced.

The Squire told the story of the influences that had been brought to bear on an inoffensive woman to induce her to turn against her best friends and make herself and them ridiculous before the eyes of a gaping village. He described the manner in which that woman had cared for his home and had been a mother to his orphan children.

As he talked, Maria's angular stiffness doubled forward. When he paid tribute to her unselfishness and honor before she had been misled by busybodies in the village—and he gave the names of those persons—Maria crept around the end of the Squire's pew and sat down in its further end. In another minute she had her head in the lap of the Squire's wife and was sobbing.

The Squire changed his topic then and paid his respects to the meddlers who had ruined the peace of a good woman, and those present do say that fiercer invective never rolled from his lips even in the big murder trial of the county. A half dozen whom he especially assailed bowed their heads and sneaked from the church. No one tried to stop him. The talk around town next day was that it proved the most helpful sermon on neighborliness that was ever preached in the old church.

When the Squire went home to dinner he had his wife on one arm and Maria on the other.

"You'll live with us after this Mari!" said he. "If I've got to be ha'nted I'd rather have the ghost right on the premises, for that's the regular way for family ghosts to settle."

Maria gave a half sob.

"Don't twit, Squire, after it's all been settled," remonstrated his wife.

"Oh, I forgot," said the old gentleman. "The ghost has been laid. And," he concluded with a grim smile, "I guess that those who started the ghost in business have been laid out. And it's given me a prime appetite for dinner."

came around with molasses candy to sell. In this way he earned his slim livelihood. Sometimes when the day was warm and he was tired he would wheel his little cart under the shade of a tree on some more retired street, and take a nap; but each time on waking he would find the greater part of his candy gone. He could not see a person round, and he wondered what had become of it. This had happened several times.

Finally he concluded to change his route; he would wheel over to Hillside where there were more people, and he would not go to sleep, or, if he did, he could wheel in behind some hedge on one of the large estates, and get his nap, for Urban walked and pulled his cart long distances, and got very weary.

One day he found himself in a cosy, retired place in a hedge corner and concluded to stay there all night, and after dark he took up his abode. "Surely there was no one around," he thought, and he would have one good night's sleep unmolested; but when morning came he found the same old experience had occurred.

He was a trifle disheartened, but he turned his pockets inside out, counted his pennies, and decided to leave the town. He could not trace anybody or anything. He would try some other place. He had pennies enough to buy a breakfast, a new supply of candy, and pay his toll over the river to Leesdale.

He had been two days in the same mysterious way. Then he decided to get out of the town if not out of the state, and so he went away, but he did not go far.

At Marvale, the next town to Leesdale, the summer cottages were open and the occupants were come for the season, and among them were Mr. and Mrs. Headly, a daughter, a cook, a butler, a coachman, two horses, a pony and an African parrot.

One evening some friends came to welcome them to Marvale. They chatted of things past and present and things to come.

"Did Moll Pitcher come, too?" asked Mrs. Ballard.

"Oh, yes, we could not leave the parrot at home alone," replied Mrs. Headly.

Katie Headly came in just then, flushed from a ride on her "precious Cradle" as she called her steed. More conversation followed, and then the Ballards took their leave.

The next morning the bowl of loaf sugar was empty. This had happened several times at the breakfast table. Mrs. Headly felt annoyed, but kindly admonished the butler that this must not happen again. He vindicated himself very well, but several breakfasts more found the sugar-bowl empty until the Headlys began to feel very curious. The servants had been with them for many years, certainly they had no hand in the disappearance of the sugar, and were as puzzled as were the family. Of course Moll Pitcher had a lump now and then, and "Cradle," the pony, but that was nothing; that did not explain matters.

Mr. Headly proposed for Bertan, the butler, to fill the bowl again at night as usual, which he did in their presence and placed it on the sideboard as was customary, ready for breakfast. The next morning it was gone as before.

Toward noon one day who should come to the rear door, tired, worn and thirsty, but Urban Vetchy, the candy-man, who asked for a drink of water. The cook sent him to the stable where the stable boy gave him a drink of water; but before he went he wheeled his cart in among the shrubbery and under the shade of a tall bush to keep the sun from it.

When he returned from the stable he found half of his candy gone. He did not know what to do but to complain to the cook, who told him that there was no one on the premises who would even think of such a thing as taking his candy. So he left thinking that his poor and mysterious luck had started up again.

The family determined to solve the mystery, the disappearance of the loaf sugar, for the ground sugar never was missed. So the butler was instructed to fix up a place in one corner of the dining-room to lie down, and to pass the night there.

Bertan drank strong coffee and kept awake until half past one o'clock when he fell asleep. When he awoke it was daylight. He got up and found the sugar-bowl empty. He felt that he was beaten, and felt ashamed of himself for falling asleep. He would sit up all night next time. At breakfast Bertan confessed that he fell asleep. "No sugar" became a by-word.

The weather being fine Mr. and Mrs. Headly went on a twenty-mile drive, returning in the early evening. It had been a very warm day, and they had dined at a country hotel on the way. Mrs. Headly retired for the night feeling very weary and in the night she was taken suddenly ill. Mr. Headly got up at once and went quietly down the side stairs and entered a small passage-way which led into the dining-room, to get some wine in the sideboard.

It was a bright moonlight night and what did he see but Lilyput, the little black and tan dog on the sideboard with her nose in the sugar-bowl. She jumped down with a lump in her mouth and ran into the hall. Mr. Headly kept quiet, and in came Lilyput again, jumped up into the chair beside the sideboard and from there to the sugar-bowl, took out a lump of sugar and went into the hall. This she did three times and each time Mr. Headly could hear a growl from Kaiser the mastiff. On her fourth trip Mr. Headly followed her into the hall and saw her lay the sugar down before Kaiser who ate it and munched with great satisfaction. Mr. Headly said nothing but was infinitely amused. He took the wine and returned to his wife, and to divert her he told her the secret of the missing sugar, which also amused her.

At the breakfast-table the next morning Mr. Headly called the dogs and offered them each a lump of sugar. Kaiser dropped his tail and wouldn't touch it. Lilyput took a lump but dropped it at once, being afraid of Kaiser. Moll Pitcher called out saying, "I told you so, I told you so, he! he!" Kaiser growled and Moll kept quiet. Mr. Headly called the butler and said "take these dogs out to the stable and give them just enough to eat to keep them from starving and bring them to me tomorrow morning at this time."

Kaiser followed Bertan with a very sheepish air. Lilyput kept running back and jumping up into his lap to kiss his hands and begged so earnestly in her way not to be sent off with Kaiser, that Mr. Headly told Bertan he need not take Lilyput. She had always been well-behaved and they were convinced that the new dog, Kaiser, had driven her to the stealing of the sugar.

A few days after this Mr. Headly met Urban Vetchy the candy-man and hailed him. "See here, Vetchy, I hear that you lost some of your stock-in-trade the other day in the neighborhood of my premises. Did you ever find any clue?"

"No sir, never, but it happened a number of times across the river just the same, but I never found any trace," replied Vetchy.

"You bring your candy-cart to my place Vetchy, to-morrow noon, and leave it in the same place, and go to the stable for a drink of water just as you did before," said Mr. Headly. "I'm afraid I will lose my candy sir," said Vetchy.

"I'll make it good to you if you do," replied Mr. Headly.

In the meantime the culprits had been in the dining-room and had a punishment by Mr. Headly holding up a lump of sugar and shaming them. They left the room in evident disgrace.

The next day Vetchy was on the spot and did exactly as Mr. Headly had told him to do. There was a vestibule on the rear side of the cottage with colored glass panels in the door. Anyone could see out plainly but no one could see in.

At the appointed time the family with the butler stationed themselves in the vestibule. After Vetchy had gone to the stable, the mastiff came out from a thick shrubbery and at once helped himself to the candy, crunching it as he would a bone, and seemed to enjoy it very much.

Mr. Headly surprised him and Kaiser crawled quickly away through the shrubbery on the other side of the house. When Vetchy returned to his cart of course some of his candy was gone. Mr. Headly then explained matters. Vetchy said that he had seen a large dog but he had not thought anything of it. He never petted strange dogs. "Well," said Mr. Headly, "no doubt my dog Kaiser is the guilty one all through these losses, and I will gladly pay for it all."

"You are very kind, sir," said Vetchy. "It is only just. I little dreamed that Kaiser was a thief," said Mr. Headly.

"Don't beat him sir, he never harmed me, and he could have torn me into pieces," said Vetchy.

"No, we won't beat him, but you bring your candy here twice a week and I will buy it all each time, and turn Kaiser loose with it, and see if he can get enough of it," said Mr. Headly.

The Headlys talked over their discovery of the missing sugar and the candy-man's trials with some amusement and seriousness withal. When Urban Vetchy came the next time Mr. Headly called Kaiser and offered him some of the candy, but the dog would not touch it. Then Mr. Headly had it all turned out on the ground under a shrub and told Kaiser to eat it; but Kaiser would not look at it, nor did the sugar ever disappear again.

Who says that an intelligent dog has no moral nature?

The United States will be represented by Hon. Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, as Special Ambassador, Gen. James H. Wilson, U. S. A. representing the Army, and Captain Charles E. Clark, who brought the warship Oregon almost round the world to fight in Cuban waters, representing the Navy.

Oscar S. Straus.

18. One of the recent great events was the meeting in New York City of the National Civic Federation at which representatives of capital and of labor discussed for several days the questions at issue between them. Hon. Oscar Straus of New York City presided, and one result was the appointment of a standing committee of thirty-six members to settle disputes and prevent strikes. Mr. Straus was appointed minister to Turkey by President Cleveland and again by President McKinley. He is a Hebrew, and represented a Christian government at a Mohammedan Court.

He received the vote of fifty-five electors as against eight for his opponent, Gen. Bartolome Maso.

Signor Guglielmo Marconi.

24, 25. For months the world has been talking about Marconi and his wireless telegraph, by which he sends messages without the aid of wires, as is done by the ordinary telegraph. But recently the world has stopped talking about that, to talk about the breaking of his engagement to be married to Miss Josephine Bowen Holman of Indianapolis, Ind. No one knows why it was broken, but gossips say it was because Signor Marconi learned that Miss Holman was a poor girl instead of the millionairess he thought her to be. Signor Marconi is only twenty-seven years old.

Prince Henry of Germany.

26. The American people do not often have an opportunity to hobnob with Princes, as the saying is, but lately they have been showing Prince Henry, brother to Emperor William of Germany, a great deal of attention. The Prince came over to represent his brother at the launching of the Emperor's yacht at Shooter Island, near New York. He is in the offices of the great road, but with the incoming of the reform administration of the city of New York he accepted the position of Civil Service Commissioner tendered him by Mayor Seth Low, and already has shown that he is well fitted for his new duties. Marshall Field.

40. Probably the greatest merchant in the world today is Marshall Field of Chicago, who by legitimate business methods has risen from a poor boy in Conway, Mass., where he was born sixty-six years ago, to be worth over one hundred millions of dollars. His great store in Chicago does a business of fifty millions a year, and he is interested in dozens of business ventures being the controlling spirit in most of them. He is less heard of in public affairs than any other rich man in the country. Mr. Field's charities amount to millions. He is a widower with two children.

John J.—The judges of the Federal Courts are not elected; they are appointed by the President and hold their office for life. The judges of the Circuit Courts of the United States receive a salary of $6,000 a year; those of the United States District Courts receive $5,000 a year.

Stratton.—Under a recent decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, certain forms of endowment and lifetime life insurance policies having what is known as a "cash-surrender value," even though payable to the wife of the insured, as beneficiary, are liable to seizure by creditors in case of the bankruptcy of the insured.

H. G. W.—A separate acknowledgment by a wife of a deed to real estate is required in the following states: Arkansas, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas. It is not necessary in Vermont.

B. S.—There is no law to prevent a person from making his or her own will, though as a rule it is a dangerous practice owing to technicalities which no one but a lawyer would understand. If you should write your own, be sure to have it properly witnessed by at least three disinterested persons signing their names to it in your presence and in the presence of each other. You must definitely state to them that the document which they are about to sign is your last will and testament and request that they sign their names as witnesses thereto.

N. F.—A marriage between an uncle and a niece would be within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity and therefore absolutely void under the laws of nearly every civilized community in the entire world. Legally, the children of such a union would be illegitimate.

A. J. M.—Under the laws of Colorado, the summons in a case known not to be served on you in person. If it is left at your known place of residence with a member of your household of lawful age, the notice of the action would be legal and binding on you.

Debtor.—Bankruptcy proceedings discharge a party from all his indebtedness, except such as were fraudulently or dishonestly contracted. To obtain such a discharge an action must be begun in the District Court of the United States in which the debtor lives. This can only be done through a local lawyer.

N. P.—A father is compelled by law to provide his minor children with the necessities of life for their maintenance and support. What would be considered as "necessaries" depends entirely upon the station in life of the parties concerned.

F. P. G.—Many of the states have of late passed laws making it a criminal offense to use the U. S. flag for advertising purposes. In a very recent decision, the Supreme Court of Illinois decided that such a law was unconstitutional. It does not follow, however, that a similar interpretation of the law would be handed down by the Courts of last resort of other states. The Illinois Supreme Court can only interpret the laws of its own jurisdiction.

St. Louis.—The coming World's Fair in your city was authorized by an Act of Congress to provide for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States during the administration of Thomas Jefferson. Five million $5,000,000 dollars was appropriated for this purpose and in addition thereto, the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand ($250,000) dollars for a suitable government building.

"Lincoln."—Lincoln's birthday (Feb. 12th) is a legal holiday in the following states—Connecticut, Illinois, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Washington and Wyoming. Washington's birthday (Feb. 22nd) is a legal holiday in every State in the Union, except Mississippi, where it is observed in the public schools only.

M. L.—The 12th Census of the United States was taken under an Act of Congress passed March 3rd, 1899 and covers population, agriculture, mortality and manufactures. The reports are not yet completed but the law provides that they must be fully published prior to July 1st, 1902.

F. A. S.—A marshal or constable has no right to break outer doors or forcibly enter a dwelling place. However, having once entered, he is at liberty to break inner doors in the proper performance of his duties such as an endeavor to levy on personal property, execute a search warrant, or other like matters.

F. W.—In a criminal proceeding for felony, such as you mention, a justice of the peace can sit only as a committing magistrate and not as a trial judge. He has no power, as a rule, to determine the actual guilt or innocence of the accused. His sole purpose is to ascertain whether there is probable cause to hold the accused for trial. In case no probable cause is shown by the evidence adduced, the accused should be discharged. A felony is an offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

A. B. S.—The statute of limitations varies in different states, and for different causes of action. In your state (Ills) no action can be brought on an open book account after the lapse of five years from the maturity of the account or the date of the last payment—if any—on it. A party sued who desires to take advantage of this statute, must specially invoke its aid by pleading it. That is, his lawyer must raise it as a defense on the trial of the action.

A married woman is not entitled to a pension because of the death of her son in the government service, as the result of injuries received in warfare, unless she was wholly dependent upon such son for her support.

T. L.—There is no law which prohibits the President of the United States from leaving the country during his term of office. None have ever done so, so far as we can learn. If President Roosevelt desired to pay a visit abroad, there is no legal reason why he may not do so.

Minor.—As a rule, under most if not all of the states, a minor has a right to choose his own guardian after arriving at the age of fourteen years. The rule applies to boys and girls alike.

Inquirer.—If your deceased friend has any money on deposit in a bank, it can only be drawn out by an administrator appointed by your widows' and orphans' court.

J. P. L.—Under the laws of Texas, husband and wife have equal rights in all property acquired during their married life.

A New Discovery That Cures Consumption

By Special Arrangement with the Doctor, Four Free Preparations (the Slocum System) will be Sent to all Readers of COMFORT for the Asking.

HERE IS HEALTH

These Four New Preparations comprise a complete new treatment for Consumption and nearly all the ills of life. The Food-Emulsion is needed by some, the Emulsion and Tonic by others, the Expectorant by others, the Ozojell Cure for Catarrh by others still and all four, or any three, or two, or any one, may be used singly or in combination, according to the needs of the case. Full instructions with each set of four free remedies, represented in this illustration. Also 68-page My Doctor Book.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The Slocum System of Treatment for the cure of Coughs, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Lung Troubles and Consumption is medicine reduced to an exact science by America's foremost specialist, and our readers are urged to take advantage of this generous offer. Address DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 98 Pine Street, New York.

These four remedies represent a New system of treatment and cure for the Weak and those suffering from Consumption, wasting away diseases, or inflammatory conditions of Nose, Throat and Lungs.

The treatment is Free. Write for it. By the new system devised by DR. SLOCUM, the great specialist in pulmonary and kindred diseases, all the requirements of the sick body are supplied by the FOUR remedies constituting his Special Treatment known as The Slocum System.

Whatever your disease, one or more of these four preparations will be of wonderful benefit to you.

According to the needs of your case, fully explained in the treatise given free with the free remedies, you may take one, or any two, or three, or all four, in combination.

A cure is certain. The remedies are especially adapted for those who suffer from weak lungs, coughs, sore throat, Catarrh, Consumption and other pulmonary troubles.

But they are also of wonderful efficacy to the building up of weak systems, in purifying the blood, making flesh and restoring to weak, sallow people rich and healthy constitutions.

The many ailments of women and delicate children are speedily relieved.

The basis of the entire system is a flesh-building, nerve and tissue renewing food. Every invalid and sick person needs strength. This food gives it.

Many people get the complete system for the sake of the Perfected Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil combined with Guaiacol, which they themselves need, and give away the other three preparations to their friends.

The second article is Psychine Tonic. It is good for weak, thin, dyspeptic, nervous people. For those who have no appetite, who need bracing up.

The third preparation is a medicinal healing Ozojell Cure for Catarrh, in a patent Ozojell nasal tube. It cures catarrh. It heals all irritation of the nose, throat and mucous membranes. It gives immediate relief. It is also a splendid application for sore lips and rough skin.

The fourth article is Coltsfoote's Expectorant and Cough and Cold cure. The only expectorant that can positively be relied upon. Is absolutely safe for children. Goes to the very root of the trouble, and not merely alleviates, but cures.

The four remedies form a panoply of strength against disease in whatever shape it may attack you. Sold by all druggists.

THE FREE TRIAL

To obtain these four Free preparations, illustrated above, please mention reading this in COMFORT, and write to giving full address. The four Free remedies will then be sent you, direct from the laboratories, in the hope that if they do you good you will recommend them to your friends. When writing the Doctor please tell him you read this in COMFORT, and give address in full, postoffice and express, and greatly oblige.

HITES, Allegheny Co., Pa., Oct. 26, 1901.

DEAR SIR:—I wish to recommend your medicine in the very highest terms for curing me of Consumption, when the doctors all gave me up.

Yours respectfully,
C. A. CHRISTIE.

CATONSVILLE, (Sta. A.), Baltimore, Md., Oct. 28, 1901.

DEAR SIR:—I received your samples of medicine, took them, bought more of a druggist and am now cured of my complaint. Thanking you for your kindness, I am,

Yours truly,
ROY A. MOLESWORTH.

THE HOME FINDER.

(So many inquiries are made by "Comfort" readers concerning real estate (country and city) farms and locations for homes that this column has become a necessity and here we shall be glad to answer all questions.)

Any paid subscriber who desires to make a change in their present situation or are in any way uncomfortable in their abode and want information about any particular location in any State in the Union can address "The Comfort Home Finder," Augusta, Maine, and we will try and serve them.

H. A. D. Hope, Idaho.—There are thousands of acres of land in Virginia which may be had for the taxes. In some instances this makes the land worth even less than homestead prices in the West. Much of this Virginia land is old and poor, but it answers readily to fertilizing and care, and the climate is greatly in its favor. Schools and churches abound and there is a welcome awaiting any good citizen who comes from the North or elsewhere. A land circular has been sent to you with details.

Mrs. H. G., Nashville, Tenn.—Land in Blue Grass Kentucky is worth from $50 to $150 an acre, but if you are now living on a farm near Nashville, you are in very nearly as fine a country as the Blue Grass section is. Unless you can get a very good price, indeed, for your place, we advise you to remain where you are.

Inquirer, Akron, Ohio.—The so-called abandoned farms of Massachusetts are pretty generally distributed about the state, and their prices are remarkably low, many farms being offered for less than the houses on them cost. Some of these abandoned farms have proved to be good investments, and very few of them are not worth their price, provided an active, progressive farmer gets hold of one. You can get all the information you need, short of personal acquaintance, by writing to the Secretary of Agriculture, Boston, Mass.

Indio, Sunbury, Pa.—Steubenville is the county seat of Jefferson county, Ohio, with a population of about 15,000, paved streets, trolley lines, fine public buildings, numerous churches and schools, and a cultivated, Christian and hospitable people, whose thrift is seen all over their progressive city. Politically the town is republican. A good home may be bought for from $1,500 to $3,000 and rents are from twelve dollars and a half per month, up, for such as you describe.

K. L. G., Haverhill, Mass.—We would not advise your removal to the Pacific coast on Puget Sound until you had thoroughly informed yourself of the country. The climate is very mild, never hot or cold, but it is very damp, and as yet farming is in its infancy, and will never get much beyond that stage, except in the raising of certain kinds of fruits, dairy products, poultry and eggs. Clearing the ground is very expensive as the timber is of enormous growth and the soil is filled with roots. It is also too wet for any of the grain crops. East of the Cascade Range, however, all these conditions are changed, and no finer wheat and fruit crops are raised in the world than here. Yes, the official you mention is perfectly reliable, and you may believe what he tells you.

Tired Out, Rockville, Vt.—Your story of the hard times you have had for ten years on "Rocky Farm," is interesting, and if you gave it up and went down into the Eastern Shore of Maryland with the five thousand dollars you could raise, you could buy a very fine place and still have a little to put in the bank. The metropolis of the Eastern Shore is Easton or Oxford, and land in that vicinity is worth from $30 to $60 an acre, and good land, too. The wheat and fruit are particularly fine, and rail and water transportation are ample. Washington, D. C. is only about two hours away and Baltimore, about three. The climate is mild all the year, as it is tempered by the sea. But Vermont is further from the Eastern Shore than the map shows and as you have lived all your life in the Green Mountain state, you would better try the South awhile before pulling up stakes in the North.

J. W. E., Whitewater, Wis.—We do not know who has informed you that land in the mountain portion of Kentucky is valuable for farming purposes, but however it is evidently trying to obtain your money under false pretenses. Some farms, along the tributaries of the Kentucky, Big Sandy and Cumberland rivers, make a living for their owners, but that is about all. Back from the water-courses the land may have some timber or mineral value, or may not. If not, you can buy all you want for twenty-five cents an acre, or less.

N. Y. T., Cairo, Ills.—You cannot do much in raising sugar in Louisiana unless you have some capital. Better try something more suitable to small farming.

G. M., Terra Alta, W. Va.—Write to Col. T. G. Stuart, Winchester, Ky.

J. O. McD., Warrenton, Mo.—A turpentine orchard of four or five thousand trees, covering, say, about 200 acres may be rented in North Carolina at $50 a crop, or year, and the profit is from a dollar to a dollar and a quarter an acre. It is customary to have about twenty orchards to the plant, which requires a capital of about $5,000. Your family would not find it desirable to live in the immediate neighborhood of the orchards, but there are towns with excellent society and all advantages at no great distance where you could at least spend your Sundays at home.

Miss D. Austin, Mich.—Such a home as you desire in Hartford, Conn. could not be purchased for less than $10,000, if it could be secured at all. Hartford is a home town of very well-to-do people, and those who have pleasant homes do not want to sell, unless—which is the Yankee in them—they can get every cent the place is worth, and have another in view that they can get at a bargain.

Two Young Men, Ozark, Ark.—Don't try farming in Cuba unless you have a good deal more than one thousand dollars each. Cuba is all right for development by people from the United States, but the developers must have plenty of money and know what they are going to do before they begin. If you have two thousand dollars between you, and are tired of farming in Arkansas, why not go into some sort of small manufacturing for local consumption?

THE latest novelty in the omnipresent nickel-in-the-slot machine is said to be an automatic device for blacking boots. The customer drops the necessary coin that starts the machine in motion, and then thrusts his foot into one compartment where his shoe is brushed. In another compartment the shoe is covered with blacking, and in the third it is polished, the whole operation taking about a minute and a half. The progress of the operation is indicated upon a dial.

any of our readers send us such a recipe, then we will print it for the benefit of our correspondent.

WOMAN TO WOMAN.

Salt and vinegar, applied to the fingers, will remove ink stains.

Add a little borax to flour paste to increase its adhesive qualities about one half.

Yellow dock, root or leaves, steeped in vinegar will cure the worst case of ringworm.

Dried tansy leaves are said to be good to drive away ants if placed where they congregate.

A spoonful of vinegar added to the water in poaching eggs will keep them from spreading.

The white of an egg brushed over a slight burn will exclude the air and check the smart at once.

Two drops of essence of peppermint in an ounce of water make an excellent wash for the eyes.

To make a linseed poultice gradually sprinkle four ounces of linseed into a half pint of hot water.

Flat irons should never be allowed to become red hot, as they afterwards never retain the heat properly.

Sixty grains of paraffin wax, two ounces of chloroform and three drops of oil of rose is good for a finger nail polish.

Small lumps of charcoal scattered about the corners of cellars and closets will absorb much of the dampness and bad odors.

Skimmed milk is better for washing oil cloth or linoleum than water is as it makes it fresher and brightens its polish.

When whalebone is too bent for use soak it for several hours in warm water, and dry on a flat surface. It will then be as straight as new.

Bread, cakes or pie should never be put away in a closed safe, or box, until perfectly cold; otherwise they will become soggy and heavy.

A strong solution of lye, applied with a stiff brush on a long handle to protect the hands, will be found excellent in removing stains from floors.

One part yellow wax and two and a half parts of turpentine make a simple floor wax. Apply with a brush, and polish with a woolen cloth.

Put a metal spoon or fork in a glass or china dish before pouring hot water into it. The metal conducts the heat away and the dish will not crack so readily.

Hands that begin to show the effects of being long in hot water may be softened and freshened by washing them in a mixture of equal parts of lemon juice and alcohol.

A better way to dry wet shoes than to set them by the fire is to fill them with hot bran or grain. This draws the moisture out more evenly and maintains the shape of the shoes.

Lastly beat in the whites of five eggs. Spread in two layer-cake pans. Press halves of English walnuts into the top of one of the layers, to make lengthwise rows of nut-meats. At a small dinner party, the souvenirs were small beer steins, in which was served the ice. It was frozen pudding, and after the stein had been nearly filled, whipped cream was piled on top, and allowed to run down the sides of the steins, giving the appearance of the foam on beer. The guests were quite pleased with the idea, as well as with the souvenir.

Veracious Records of the Doin's in the Cobb Corner Postoffice, "Writ out" by the Boy Behind the Counter.

[EDITOR'S NOTE. The quaint philosophers, the dry wags, the shrewd dickerers and the eminent yarn-spinners of the countryside make a forum of the country postoffice when there is room at the rear around the big stove. The stories and incidents on which some of the most successful human interest novels of the day are constructed come from the quaint loungers around the stores in Yankee communities. These official records of "Jeth's Crowd" are to be taken down month by month for the readers of "Comfort." And we hope that as you become acquainted with the members of the "Congress" your interest in their discourse and stories will deepen. In the April number of "Comfort" the "Cobb's Corner Congress" will continue sessions.]

Postmaster came out of his "pen" after he had finished distributing the mail. He is the only man in Cobb's Corner who takes a daily paper—and his copy is sent to him free. Every forenoon after the mail is in the boxes he comes out and stands before the assembled members of the cracker-barrel Congress and reads aloud whatever is especially striking in the news feed.

He tucked the paper under his arm as he walked forward, so as to leave his hands free. He stuffed two more big sticks into the barrel stove. "Reckon you old sanups would set right there on your haunches like woodchucks and let the fire go plum out," he snorted.

"Haint none of us been 'specially delegated to feed your stove for ye yet," Uncle Wack Spofford replied. "If we sh'd go to Jammin' the wood in ye would be growlin' just as bad out of the other side of your mouth. So there ye be!"

The Postmaster grunted. Then he unfolded the paper and settled his specs on the end of his nose. "There haint no gittin' along with ye anyway," he snapped, flinging one more shaft at them. "But listen while I read ye something."

In a high-pitched, cracked voice, interrupted every now and then by a vigorous snuff The Postmaster read:

"Bide Durfee was arrested yistiddy by Constable Benner and brought to the county jail in this place. Bide is admitted to be the biggest thief that ever operated in these parts. He has spent half his life in jail but he cannot be broken of his practices."

"Two weeks ago the store of Jason Beals was closed by an attachment and a seal put on the door. It now transpires that for a week Durfee has been engaged at the back door carting off the goods. He had cleaned out the store entire of everything and if it had not been for his greed he might have escaped undetected. But he made such a disturbance one night in getting the safe out that he was apprehended by our vigilant constable and will answer to his misdeeds at the next term of court."

"Haint that the jim-rammedest stealin' ye ever heered tell off?" demanded The Postmaster.

"I don't see much chance to brag on that for stealin'," declared Teed Strout. "Probly the constable is a numb-head anyway and wouldn't know any one was stealin' in the neighborhood unless the safe had dropped right square on his head. An then ag'in the critter got arrested, didn't he? Twa'n't no kind of a job, that wa'n't."

Teed rapped out the ashes from his pipe and got started before The Postmaster could interrupt.

"Let me tell ye suthin' about stealin' as was stealin'. Ever hear tell of Perk Stutivant? Never did? Seems 's though some of ye older men here ought to remember him. Tall, red-whiskered feller with eyes that kind of toed out just as though he was looking two ways to once. Wal, he allus was! Don't ye forget that. That critter wa'n't ever arrested by no constable—that is, not to stay arrested. When I remember what Perk Stutivant used to do, that stealin' that ye read about there in the paper seems like boy's play."

"Perk used to steal the pins out of his mother's hair when she was nussin' him. They didn't think nothin' of that for they reckined he might be playin'."

"But it was more serious one day when he stole the specs off her head while she was nappin' with him in her arms. He wa'n't hardly old enough to set up and take notice but he jammed them specs down in a hole in the back of the rockin' chair and it was more'n a week 'fore they could find 'em."

"Still they didn't think that the little tyke really meant to steal anything. But it was some different when the doctor come to vaccinate him. While the doc was scratchin' Perk's little arm and hushabyin' him, Perk calmly stole his watch off the chain and dropped it down behind the cushion of the chair. Doc went away without noticin' that he had lost his watch and it was sev'ral days 'fore he got the thing figgered out and got the watch back ag'in."

"Them things and a few others sort of give Perk's family the idee that p'raps he would steal if ye'd give him the chance. Later on his folks become sure of it. I shouldn't git done 'fore chore time if I tried to tell ye all the things the critter done. I can only give ye a sample or tew and it's more'n likely I'm forgettin' the best ones."

"Perk used to like to steal things where he could show some science. Most anybody can hook a di'mond ring and snoop away with it. But Perk liked to steal lo'ds of hay and a bin of pertaters out of a sullen and sheep and all them things. One time his brother-in-law's fam'ly was away to a grove meetin' and Perk went down to their place, burst into the house, dressed himself up in his brother-in-law's wedding suit, even to the tall hat, put a halter on a cow, loaded a rack with hay, hitched the cow on behind and started for the next town. He peddled the stuff, includin' some butter and eggs he got in the sullen, and was jest dickerin' off the weddin' suit when the brother-in-law overhauled him."

"Perk had an uncle out West that was a reg'lar old sassage machine on legs. Ugliest man ever heerd tell of. Folks thought they would send Perk out to live with him a while. Perk's father said he had licked him enough to thrash a barn full of oats and he reckoned his arm would be paralyzed 'less he got red of him for a while."

"Wal, that uncle out West was lookin' for jest that kind of exercise. He run a ranch and he used to lick Perk night and mornin' 'stead of usin' the dumb bells. Said his health kept improvin' right along. But Perk done suthin' a little later on that sort of give him a relapse. Uncle had jest got his fall drove in shape to sell. There was a couple hundred head. Drover come along and offered a price. Uncle haggled and they couldn't settle. So drover went along. That night Perk snooped out, rounded the herd and set off with it after the drover. Came up with him about mornin'."

Perk told drover that his uncle had changed his mind and would let the cattle go for the price that had been offered. Drover remembered to have seen Perk at the place the day before and so he reckoned that ev'rything was right. He took the cattle and paid over the money to Perk. Perk took it and hopped aboard a train and enjoyed a tour of the country. They like to never caught him and when they did, why, most of the money was gone. But it was sort of in the fam'ly and they couldn't seem to do much. Perk said that at the rate of a dollar a lickin' to improve his uncle's health—reg'lar doctor fee—he had only got about ha'f his pay and he guessed the old man better shet up."

"Perk settled down at home for a while. Things kept comin' his way. People around town done the best they could to balk him but farmers can't afford to put time locks on ev'ry-thing around the premises."

"But fin'ly the thing did git pritty sassy. The people in our place seemed perfectly willin' to divvy with Perk but consarn him, they wouldn't stand for him to take the whole thing. So it was talked over and the sheriff was called on to see if suthin' couldn't be done to discourage Perk's souvenir craze. He said he reckoned there could if the court she knew herself and he think she did. So he arrested Perk, and as they didn't have no lock-up in the place they put him in the school house and picked a dozen men to guard him. All the men had shot guns and powder horns and they allowed to Perk that now they had him they proposed to keep him if they had to chip in and buy a cemetery lot to do it."

"They didn't have any light in the school house. The twelve men set around on the desks and talked about one thing and another. It got to be midnight. Perk had strolled around more or less for he didn't seem to be tryin' to git away. He talked with one man after the other and was real sociable. But as he talked with the men he used his science and he emptied the powder out of every horn, one after the other, into his own pocket. Then while he whistled and sa'ntered 'round he let that powder dribble out in a train around the room, up one side and down another."

"Then when ev'rything was ready Perk commenced to talk to 'em in a low, boogerish tone about devils and spooks and all sech like."

"Fellers," says he, "I'll tell ye suthin', now that I'm goin' to jail and my career is o'er. I'm under the control of the devil himself and I can't help doin' what I've done. Hear him howlin' for me outside?"

"There was a screech owl down in the woods yarkin' away, but the men were so scared that they couldn't have told a screech owl from a saw mill."

"They shivered and Perk went on. 'Course you understand,' said he, 'that I've done enough for the devil so that he is willin' to help me any time. Ye understand,' says he, 'I can call on him right this minit,' says he, 'and he will come and take me off in a cloud of fire. Would it scare you?' he says."

"Don't ye try none of them shines," says one of the men, shiverin'. 'We don't want to have no truck with the devil no way, shape, or manner.'

"You've been pretty clever to me," says Perk, 'and he probly wouldn't hurt ye if he did come. I've got a good mind to call him in the old familiar way him and me have arranged. Jest for fun, ye know! The spell starts off like this:—

"'Urro goo zuhoop ga dock—devil come and bust the lock!'

"Say, you shet up on them things," said one of the men. 'They haint Christian. You have over any more of that lingo of tophet and we'll muzzle ye.'

"Oh, if ye are goin' to commence to threaten me," says Perk, 'why I've got to do suthin' to persect myself.'

"Then he commenced to holler over a lot of outlandish stuff and he set fire to the trail of powder. Whush-h-h! How it did fizzle and flash. The men all gave a yell and broke for out doors—right out through the windows, glass and all. And Perk followed along after 'em, pickin' up the guns they throwed away. He skipped over to the next town and sold the guns and went on a toot. If he hadn't done that I guess they wouldn't have caught him. But they did scoop him in and they took him to court after a time to have his trial. Say, that court house was packed clean full to the doors. There wasn't a man in the whole county that had no sech repertation as Perk Stutivant. Ev'ry one kind of admired the critter. If he'd only knowed a leetle more we'd sent him to Congress to steal for his district.

"Wal, s'r, we all set there in the court room waitin' for the prisoner to be brought in. All to once the sheriff ducked into the room through the door leadin' to the jail and bollerred gruff-like, 'The prisoner has escaped!' Then off he skeaddled. He hopped into his team that was tied in front of the court house and tore down the street. All the folks that had teams there chased along behind lickity-split."

"Now what do ye think had happened? We all knew that 'ere jail was too strong to be broke out of and we wondered how Perk had got away. Durin' the time the critter had been tied up in his cell he had frayed out a gray blanket and made himself a set of grey whiskers jest like the sheriff's. When the sheriff had gone to the cell that day of the trial to bring Perk to the court room, Perk had dragged him into the cell, gagged him, put on the sheriff's co't and hat and the whiskers and scooted into the court room and hollerred what I've told. That give him a chance to ride off whoopity-larup lookin' for the prisoner, and it took all the people's attention away from the jail for a while."

"But the sheriff didn't have nothin' extry for a boss. So Perk found that they were crawlin' up on him rather fast. If they overtook him then they were bound to see that he wasn't the sheriff."

"Perk licked up for a last spurt and turned a corner in the ro'd some ways ahead of the push. He run the horse in behind some bushes, throwed off his co't and vest, hopped into a field and when the crowd came whoopin' along he was bent over back-to building up a piece of stone wall. As the ro'd was straight ahead and the sheriff's team was nowhere in sight, the first man along yelled, 'Hi there, farmer, seen anything of a man ridin' past here's if Old Brimstone had kicked him?'

"Jest pulled his hoss in there side of the ro'd," Perk said, still stoopin' over and gruntin' at a rock. Then says he: 'He went skoohootin' off acrost the field there chasin' some critter 'ruther. Went off to 'ards that clump of bushes down there.' Perk shoved his thumb over his shoulder and kept on to work."

"I sh'd think ye'd have narvous prostration ye take so much int'rest in what's goin' on round ye," jawed one of the men who drove up. Then the caboodle hitched their hosses and slam-banged down acrost the field to help the sheriff catch the man who had got away. The crowd in that county expected to git so much fun out of the trial that they was jest bound to nab Perk."

"Wal, after they was out of sight in the woods Perk unhitched their hosses from the waggins and towed the whole bunch over into the next county where he dickered 'em away as a consignment of western hosses that he was auctionin' and then he got away 'fore they could catch him."

"Now that was a pretty slick operation of Perk's but in my opinion it wa'n't up to what he done the next time they caught him. It was this way. He—"

"Phh-pah," yelled Teed Strout's youngest in at the door of the postoffice, "mah-mah says come home quick. The old cow has got her horns twisted under the stanchion chain and is chokin' to death." Teed clumped away growling anathemas.

"Who is this Perk Stutivant anyway, what he's tellin' about?" asked Uncle Wack. "I never heered tell of him round in these parts."

"Can't you tell when a man's lyin' to ye?" demanded The Postmaster.

"It's too hard work to figger it out—too brain wearin'," said Wack. "Course in your case we git off easy for you lie all the time." And then The Postmaster was so mad that he ordered them all off the premises in the name of the United States "Govment," by ginger!

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

It is fast becoming a fact that we no longer look to the other side for our fashions as in former days, and the extent to which Paris styles govern American ideas is daily growing less. French creations are copied to a great degree but they are compelled to undergo modifications before they are acceptable to American taste, which shows that American women are possessed of considerable common sense and not naturally given to running to extremes. In short, French ideas are only followed so far as is consistent with the dictates of good taste.

Some have startled us all by declaring the dip front to be on the wane, but it will doubtless retain its popularity for some time to come, at least through the coming season. Most of the new gown models display this style. There is a modification noticeable however, and some round effects will be seen, but the beloved dip front will be with us for some time to come.

Beaded belts are certainly growing in favor. There are the elastic and the non-elastic belts in all sizes and shapes. Steel is the more popular, but in the high grade belts some remarkably handsome effects are seen in black and gold. Satin, also silk ribbons in narrow widths and in bright colors, ornamented with rows of stitching in the same color are being used as appliques.

One of the results of the vogue for linen is the production of a new shade termed Paris ecru, somewhat darker than the shade commonly known by that name. In fact, ivory and Paris ecru are to be prominent among the colors in linen for the coming season.

Black silk embroidery on black cloth tailored gowns is the very latest expression of elegance on models from some of the most prominent houses in Paris. Many beautiful patterns are shown in flower work in a variety of colors, the material being all silk and the blossoms having hand-crocheted buttons for centers. Another striking novelty in which flowers figure prominently, has Edelweiss blossoms hand-painted on a white ground with a border in Paris ecru. One of the newest things in the spangled pendant trimming.

Many of the new skirts made of summery stuffs show a slight indication of fullness across the front and sides while the back is laid in deep pleats, or shirred. Habit backs obtain largely in cloth gowns, but are seldom seen absolutely plain, being relieved by buttons, or straps, or rows of flat trimming, anything to break up the severe surface.

An odd trimming used on a gown of pale gray broadcloth was as follows. Around the foot of the skirt, and graduating up the front, were large circles cut out of the cloth under which was laid striped silk of black and white, the white predominating. The edges of the circles were cut out irregularly, showing sharply over the silk. The same design decorated bodice and sleeves.

With the advent of summer we are to see the lace mitt and hair net girl in evidence; very new and startling, but altogether swaggar. She is the beginning of Le Pompadour in whose wake, so far as dress goes we are so soon to follow. Daintily flowered gauzes, muslins, soft silks and chiffons, wreathed and sprigged all over, are to be made up into fluttering skirts with flounces and frills galore. Some with the front breadth only are flounced in petticoat effect, over which opens the skirt proper, edged with ribbon flatly quilled, or by a narrow frill or ruche.

Already modistes are showing us the long, tight bodice with its long, sloping shoulders, and open front caught together by flat bows of ribbon, such as Madam Du Barry wore so long ago. Elbow sleeves with frill upon frill at the elbow, met by long lace mitts, the hair a la chignon, bunched under a jeweled net, and atop of it all, a picturesque hat, galore with plumes, then a long, long handled parasol, and you are complete.

We may even wear panniers before the summer wanes; we certainly will see draperies, and so we move on, in constant evolution.

Summer shirt waists are to be buttoned in the back, and are extremely dainty creations, set full as they are with beautiful laces, and hand needle work.

A novel little Eton is set forth here which is certain to delight the eye of the artistic woman. It is made of black satin and consists of side pleats set on a flat yoke, well fitted, over which falls a sailor collar of white batiste beautifully embroidered on the edges. The sleeves are also side pleated and bell shape, finished off by double frills of lace to fall over the hand.

A Giant Tree.

HE Blue Gum tree of Tasmania often reaches the height of three hundred feet and measures forty feet in diameter. The leaves are a very unusual shape and size and are a bluish green in color. In many places where it is found it is known, we are told, as the Fever Tree, as its leaves emit an odor which serves as a disinfectant, and its roots absorb all water from the surrounding ground, thus making marshes less dangerous as fever traps.

Soap is such a common article of use with us that we are apt to be surprised when we learn that there are many countries where it is wholly unknown.

IN THE NATION'S MIND

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

SENATOR HOAR OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ONE of the ablest members of the United States Senate is Hon. George Frisbie Hoar, of Massachusetts. Senator Hoar has been a member of Congress since 1869, serving four terms in the House of Representatives before his election to the higher branch, which occurred in 1877, so that for thirty-three years he has served his commonwealth in the national legislature. He was born in Concord, Mass., in 1826, and graduated from Harvard college before he was twenty years of age. The degree of LL. D. has been conferred upon him by four colleges, William and Mary, Amherst, Yale and Harvard. He is not so old by three years as Senator Pettus of Alabama, but he has seen more of congressional life. In 1876 he served as a member of the electoral commission and for more than thirty years he has been a prominent figure in national affairs. Just now, he is opposed to the retention of the Philippines and is insistent that the government shall relinquish its control over these islands and assist the people thereof in establishing a republic of their own. Senator Hoar is recognized as one of the foremost anti-imperialists of the country although he is a firm supporter of the Republican party.

The Legislature of New Jersey has elected John Fairfield Dryden United States Senator to succeed the late Senator Sewall. Senator Dryden is of old New England stock. He was born in Farmington, Maine, Aug. 7, 1839, and was educated for the legal profession. He was named for John Fairfield, who was Governor of the State of Maine at the time of his birth. For nearly thirty years he has been prominent in New Jersey business circles and is the president of a leading insurance company.

SENATOR DRYDEN OF NEW JERSEY.

The Cuban reciprocity question is pending in Congress. The bone of contention is the question of reducing the duty on Cuban Sugar. It is said that the President and the members of the cabinet are in favor of the proposition to reduce the duty about twenty-five per cent.

JUSTICE BREWER, U. S. SUPREME COURT.

The speech of David Josiah Brewer, one of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court, which was delivered in Philadelphia a short time ago, has attracted national attention. In this speech Justice Brewer advances the pessimistic idea that this country is in a bad way. He says that it is a mistake to suppose that this republic has already won the battle of life. The battle is still on and it must be waged with all the courage and persistence of the Pilgrim Fathers, or else it may be lost. Justice Brewer has been a member of the Supreme Court since 1889, and is a nephew of the late Justice Stephen J. Field, who for many years was a member of the same high tribunal.

A bill reducing the war revenue taxes $77,000,000 has been completed by Chairman Payne of the Ways and Means Committee and has passed the House without a dissenting vote.

Signor des Planches is the successor of Baron Fava as ambassador from Italy to this country. He has only recently arrived in Washington, after having served his country for more than a quarter of a century in the diplomatic service. He comes from an old and distinguished family of Savoy, which, for more than five centuries, has occupied a leading and influential place in the diplomatic history of Italy.

SIGNOR DES PLANCHES, ITALIAN MINISTER.

The amount of money in circulation in the United States on February 1, not including $290,259,552 held in the treasury as assets of the government, was $2,259,951,009, being an increase of $69,171,486 since one year ago. The circulation per capita, based on an estimated population of 78,560,000, was $28.77, as against $28.33 a year ago, and the highest yet reached in the history of the country.

SENATOR GORMAN OF MARYLAND.

Senator returns to that body after an absence of several years caused by the defeat of the party to which he belongs, but in the case of Mr. Gorman such an experience has come to him. Arthur Pue Gorman was born in Maryland in 1839, and during his sixty-three years of life has cut a greater figure in the politics of the nation than that of the average public man. At the age of thirteen years he was made a page by the appointment of the great Stephen A. Douglass, and when he retired from the list of Senate employees in 1868, he held the office of postmaster. He then went back to Maryland and has been an active politician ever since. His early experiences in the Senate chamber bred in him an ambition and a determination to become a Senator himself some day, and his youthful dream was realized when he succeeded William Pinckney Whyte and took his seat March 4, 1881, serving until 1899. Mr. Gorman has always been a Democrat and was manager of the Democratic National Campaign in 1884, which resulted in the election of Grover Cleveland to the presidency of the United States. His return to the Senate after four years' retirement may be regarded as one of the unusual peculiarities of politics.

Dr. Presley Marion Rixey, whom President Roosevelt has made surgeon general of the navy, has been a capable and popular officer of that service since 1874. He is a native Virginian, entered the navy when twenty-four years old and has served in various positions in the medical department of the service. He was a close and warm friend of President McKinley and attended him after he had been shot by the assassin. President McKinley had promised to nominate him for the surgeon generalship, a promise President Roosevelt has ratified.

DR. RIXEY, U. S. NAVY.

Senator Hoar, from the Committee on Judiciary, has favorably reported a bill for the protection of the President of the United States, the Vice-President and others. It provides that any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction, wilfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President or any officer in line of succession, or who shall wilfully cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death. An attempt to commit either of the offences mentioned is also punishable by death. The bill also provides twenty years' imprisonment for the person found guilty of advising the killing of the persons named, and five years' imprisonment is provided for persons convicted of uttering, spoken or published, which threaten to kill or advise or instigate any person to kill the person named.

LADY PAUNCEFOOT.

An unusual proceeding marked a recent President's reception of the foreign diplomats. The line of notable callers was led by a woman. Lady Pauncefoot it was who had the distinction of filling this unique function. Lord Pauncefoot, the British ambassador and dean of the corps, being unavoidably absent, his place was filled by his stately wife, who led the line and was the first to extend her respects to the President.

SENATOR ALLISON OF IOWA.

Senator William B. Allison of Iowa, whose re-election to a sixth term in the United States Senate occurred a short time ago, is the Nestor, in point of service, of the higher branch of Congress. In the history of this country he is the third man to receive the honor of a sixth consecutive election to the Senate. Senator Anthony of Rhode Island died before he began service in his sixth term, and Senator Morrill of Vermont died a few months after his sixth term began.

Forty years ago Mr. Allison was elected a member of the lower house of Congress, where he served four terms. In 1873 he became a member of the Senate and will have completed thirty years in that body on March 3, 1903. Judging from his magnificent physique and perfect health, he will probably serve out his sixth term and surpass the record of all his predecessors in the Senate. Mr. Allison is one of the most influential men in either branch of Congress. For many years he has been the chairman of the committee on appropriations, a position regarded as the most important in either body. His name has often been mentioned in connection with the presidency, but he has steadfastly refused to become a candidate for that high office, believing that he could render more service to his country in the position he now occupies than if he were elected to the exalted station of President of the United States. He is 73 years of age.

Among the notable men whom Andrew Carnegie has named as trustees of the national university, which the distinguished philanthropist is to endow with ten millions of dollars, none occupies a more commanding place in the industrial progress of the country than Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor. He was born in New Hampshire in 1840, the son of a clergyman. For nearly thirty years he has been engaged in statistical work, first as commissioner of the Massachusetts Bureau of Labor and since 1885 as United States Commissioner. He holds high rank among the educators of the country.

CARROLL D. WRIGHT, U. S. COMR. OF LABOR.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections has favorably reported the amendment to the constitution changing the day for the inauguration of the President from March 4 to the last Thursday in April. The resolution provides that the change shall take effect in 1905, and extends the term of President Roosevelt from March 4 to that date. It is also provided that hereafter the terms of Senators

CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.

A SUBSCRIBER asks the meaning of a marriage or attachment line with a cross against it. It is a bad sign and the sign of some obstacle in the way of the marriage or trouble afterwards, but unless it appears in both hands this does not hold good.

She also says: "A line heavy and deep, with two smaller, short lines accompanying it, starts from the heart line, both hands, (tho' the left is not nearly so deep) rises to the head line and cuts diagonally thro' it, breaking the head line under Saturn; this head line goes on and ends in stars just above the percussion. This line from heart to head is growing longer. What does it signify?" I should call such a line a worry line which would indicate some trouble connected with the heart which causes the subject a good deal of anxiety. It may also mean some danger to the life either by accident or murderous design. If the head line, however, ends in a star on Jupiter, this means a great deal of good luck with an honorable marriage. On the contrary, if it is on the other side of the hand on the percussion under the Mount of Mercury, it would mean some strange fatality coming into the life. A star is seldom a fortunate sign.

Again she said: "When the health or fate lines are twisted together near the wrist and two short, straight lines run from them into the life line at about 60 or 65—what means that—" These marks would mean a very severe illness at that time and possibly death.

"I. S. Grandmother" sends impression of her hand for reading this month. She has a peculiar hand and one which I should prefer to examine personally on account of the strangeness of some of the lines. As I have often said, it is difficult to judge of a hand by a smoke paper impression as the quality, shape and other things about a hand, which will affect their reading, do not show in any kind of an impression. In fact some of our best palmists refuse to read from impressions at all, although they often take impressions to keep after they have read the hand itself. I. S. has lead or will lead, a rather strange life. She suffered from ill health during her girlhood and was prevented from doing exactly as she chose by those who were her natural guardians. She married young, and happily and I think will marry the second time after she is forty. There was, however, some strange circumstance connected with that first marriage which I frankly confess I do not quite make out under these impressions. I think she married some one either by coercion or because of the advice of friends, but the happier marriage will come later in life. There was some love affair early in life which caused her a great deal of trouble. One of her marriages, however, and I think the last one will prove very fortunate as she has a star on the Mount of Jupiter which is enough in itself to offset a good many bad signs.

She is an attractive woman to the opposite sex and will have several love affairs in her life, not all of which will end as she would like them to. There is a strange mixup of the lines at forty-five or thereabouts and I think she will have a severe illness about that time but will live to be old. The greater part of her wealth will come after she is forty and there will be considerable money for her after that. Her health will always be rather delicate, however. She has many natural gifts of person and of mind. She has many friends and her talents are such that she might make a success of the stage if she would choose that as her profession. I would, however, advise her when she was near a good palmist to go and see him and get his reading. I am often asked to tell the exact truth about what I see in a hand but nearly always I am severely blamed if all I read is not favorable. Mr. Heron Allen gives an experience which is common I think to most palmists. On one occasion he was accosted by a crowd of young people who asked him to read their hands. He answered that he would read only one set and picking out a very young girl with a childish face and a lot of fluffy hair, told her that he would read hers but that if there was anything in her life she did not want her companions to know to say so and he would read someone's else. She denied this and then he looked at her hands for an instant. Again looking up into the laughing, childish face he said:

"You look about nineteen, and as if you had never had a trouble in your life, but you have had the most terrible time of it I have ever seen written on a hand so young as yours. You have been married twice, and this, of all things, strikes me in your hand, that you married your second husband when your first husband was alive. Your first marriage was an affair of pique, an impulse of your foolish head, and was a miserable one; your second was an affair of heart, a love-match, but it was extremely bad for you from a commercial point of view. Even now, whilst you walk here with a smile on your lips and a racquet in your hand, you are undergoing some mental agony: let me congratulate you on being the most astounding—actress, shall I say?—that I have ever come across."

She was silent for a moment, and then said: "What I am going to tell you no one but my maid, who is in Chicago now, has ever known, and I tell it to you as a reward for speaking so boldly in the face of the magnificent lie I told you just now. I am an American and came here with some people today, and don't know a soul in the place; I am twenty-three (though I don't look it). At eighteen I quarrelled with my people, and in a fit of rage, married, simply to get rid of them. My husband turned out a scoundrel and knocked me about, to speak plainly, and after a year we were divorced. When I was twenty I fell in love for the first time, and married a man whom I simply worshipped. We were as happy as possible, but after a few months he was struck with a fever that gradually wasted him away, and he died two years ago, leaving me simply a pauper, for during his illness his business in Chicago left him. I came over here with some friends. What you say about my present state of mind is quite true, for I saw my first husband yesterday at the Academy, and have been in a state of terror ever since. Now, if you please, we will go back and lie to the other people about what you have been telling me."

THE GERMAN EMPEROR'S YACHT.

The Emperor's Yacht.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

AT Shooters Island, in New York harbor, at this writing, the finishing touches are being put on the schooner yacht being built from A. Cary Smith's design to the order of the Emperor of Germany. By courtesy of his designer, a drawing has been made of her from actual design, which shows exactly how she will look when under sail.

The new yacht is built of steel, with steel deck angle iron for beam and frames. The yacht is built especially strong, as she is to make voyages across the North Sea and German ocean, and to the north. She is of the cruiser type, with channel plates on the outside. She is a clean-cut looking ship and is built to rate first-class in every particular. In every essential she is a New York boat from keel to truck. She was designed and built there, and everything about her rig and sails was made in New York.

The launching of this magnificent boat is scheduled for Tuesday, February 25, and the event will be of international interest. Miss Alice Roosevelt, daughter of the President, will act as sponsor for the vessel. Prince Henry of Prussia, brother to the Emperor, is to be present at the great festivity which, it is confidently expected, will exceed in grandeur any similar event in the world's history. While in America Prince Henry will be entertained by the nation and by several of the leading cities.

The royal yacht, Hohenzollern, has already arrived in New York and will participate in the launching program. Admiral Count von Baudissin is in command. Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans is in charge of the naval display in honor of the German prince.

The entire country and even the whole world awaits with intense interest the launching of the American yacht built for the Emperor of Germany, which, however, would pass as an event of no extraordinary interest, had not the Emperor made it an opportune occasion to display to the world the cordial good will existing between the German and American governments, and to thus put at rest the rumors of international friction which have disturbed the press and the people of both countries since the outbreak of the Spanish-American war.

The whole thing was suggested and planned by the Emperor as a most delicate and handsome compliment to American people and to their government and President.

When it is remembered that this Prince Henry whom he sends to represent him is the same, who as commander of the German naval squadron at Manila had the misunderstanding with Admiral Dewey, it is almost suggestive of an apology.

The Emperor's invitation for Miss Roosevelt to act the leading part in the ceremony, which the Emperor has sent his brother to take part in, is a public and official recognition that the daughter of a President ranks equally with the princes of the royal blood.

It is to be sincerely hoped that the American people will give the Prince such a reception as the good will which prompted his mission merits.

--PRINCE HENRY OF PRUSSIA.

The following facts about Prince Henry of Prussia will be found of special interest at this time:

HIS FAMILY.

He is of the Prussian royal family of Hohenzollern.

He is the only brother of the reigning German Emperor; son of a German Emperor; grandson of a German Emperor; great-grandson of a long line of Prussian Kings.

He is a nephew of the King of England and grandson of Queen Victoria.

He is a brother-in-law and also own cousin of the Czarina of Russia.

He is intimately connected by blood or marriage with the ruling houses of all the smaller German principalities and kingdoms.

At the time of his birth, his grandfather, William I., was King of Prussia, the empire not having been formed.

In 1871, his grandfather became first Emperor of the modern German Empire.

In 1888, his father, Frederick III., ascended the throne of Germany as second Emperor.

The same year Frederick III. died and was succeeded by his son, Henry's brother, William II., the present Emperor.

William II. has several children, who are now in line for succession to the throne. Prince Henry's chance of ever becoming Emperor is therefore extremely remote.

HIS PHYSIQUE.

He is six feet and half an inch tall.

He weighs about 182 pounds.

He is always in the pink of physical condition and has not an ounce of fat upon his frame.

He wears a light brown beard and mustache. The mustache he allows to grow naturally, and he will not have barbers playing with it as they do with his imperial brother's.

His beard is trimmed to a point.

His eyes are blue and clear. He does not wear glasses.

He is tireless, physically.

He is extraordinarily full-blooded, for he can stand for hours in a suit of wet clothes in a bitter wind and experience no ill results.

Even in the ball room of the imperial palace at Berlin he walks with the rolling swagger of a sailor. Directions from the Emperor on this point have no effect upon him.

His face is deeply tanned from long years at sea.

His hands are coarse and red, and his nails kept short for the same reason.

His conversational tone is clear and hearty.

When singing he has a mellow bass voice.

HIS MORALS.

Unlike the great majority of royalties, he made a love match. Bismarck opposed the princess whom he selected, but he said he would remain a bachelor forever if he were denied. He had his way.

He has been a loving and faithful husband. Though the multitudinous temptations incident to a combination of sea life and royalty have been thrown in his way, he has laughed them off. No scandal has ever tainted his name.

He was a dutiful son, the favorite of his father, who left him the bulk of his private fortune.

He is a devoted father, making it an object of his life to lighten the burden of his eldest son, Waldeemar, who is deaf and dumb.

He drinks beer, wine and spirits, but never to excess.

He smokes cigars and pipes, but not cigarettes.

He plays cards for money, but never so heavily as to involve his opponents beyond their immediate means.

He is not extravagant. Not even in his youth, when his allowance was comparatively small, did he run into debt.

HIS TEMPERAMENT.

He is the only one of the Hohenzollerns who has a sense of humor.

In spite of his love for music, he is not of a melancholy disposition, nor is he subject to moods.

He is not vain; nor does he relish the frills and furbelows of court life.

Contrarywise, he likes to be at sea, where he knows he is down to the elements. Waves and wind do not flatter.

He has the only democratic nature of all the royalties in Europe. He easily gets on terms of good-fellowship with all whom he meets.

He has a large degree of personal magnetism, which enables him to impress favorably people he meets for the first time.

He despises all men not thoroughly masculine; and women not entirely feminine.

He is fearless, both morally and physically. He has risked his life for common sailors on the ship twice. He talks back to the Emperor when he feels like it, and has been banished two or three times temporarily for lese majeste to his brother.

He is preternaturally calm, and has never been "rattled."

HIS TITLES.

Marvelous Elixir of Life Discovered by Famous Doctor-Scientist That Cures Every Known Ailment.

Wonderful Cures are Effected That Seem Like Miracles Performed—The Secret of Long Life of Olden Times Revived.

The Remedy Is Free to All Who Send Name and Address.

After years of patient study, and delving into the dusty record of the past, as well as following modern experiments in the realms of medical science, Dr. James W. Kidd, 222 Baltes Block, Fort Wayne, Ind., makes the startling announcement that he has surely discovered the elixir of life. That he is able with the aid of a mysterious compound, known only to himself, produced as a result of the years he has spent in searching for this precious life giving boon, to cure any and every disease that is known to the human body. There is no doubt of the doctor's earnestness in making his claim and the remarkable cures that he is daily effecting seems to bear him out very strongly. His theory which he advances is one of reason and based on sound experience in a medical practice of many years. It costs nothing to try his remarkable "Elixir of Life," as he calls it, for he sends it free, to anyone who is a sufferer, in sufficient quantities to convince of its ability to cure, so there is absolutely no risk to run. Some of the cures cited are very remarkable, and but for reliable witnesses would hardly be credited. The lame have thrown away crutches and walked about after two or three trials of the remedy. The sick, given up by home doctors, have been restored to their families and friends in perfect health. Rheumatism, neuralgia, stomach, heart, liver, kidney, blood and skin diseases and bladder troubles disappear as by magic. Headaches, backaches, nervousness, fevers, consumption, coughs, colds, asthma, catarrh, bronchitis and all affections of the throat, lungs or any vital organs are easily overcome in a space of time that is simply marvelous.

Partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, dropsy, gout, scrofula and piles are quickly and permanently removed. It purifies the entire system, blood and tissues, restores normal nerve power, circulation and a state of perfect health is produced at once. To the doctor all systems are alike and equally affected by this great "Elixir of Life." Send for the remedy to-day. It is free to every sufferer. State what you want to be cured of and the sure remedy for it will be sent you free by return mail.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Two months of 1902 slipped by, and how much have we accomplished? I am not speaking of the President, laboring to worthily fill the place of our deeply mourned McKinley; or of Congress, now deep in the struggle to better the condition of the country, or of any other of the national problems; but of the private, spiritual betterment of each one of us. "Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul, As the swift seasons roll! Leave thy low-vaulted past! Let each new temple, nobler than the last, Shut thee from Heaven with a dome more vast, Till thou at length art free, Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

Our first letter this month takes us to that part of the country where the Arcadians, whose pitiful story is so pathetically told by Longfellow in "Evangeline," ended their wanderings.

"From busy, bustling Canada to the quiet, dreamy country along the Atchafalaya river, that queer, half-asleep stream that flows out of the great 'Father of Waters'—what a journey and what a contrast in its termini! Such is the trip your correspondent recently took, and over nearly the same route travelled that ancient people, the Arcadians, many years before. Canada, below the forty-fifth parallel, is so lovely in September. Beautiful flowers, rivaling those of the tropics, delighted my astonished eyes; tender, green sward covered the parks, the like of which is possible with us (in Tennessee) only in the early spring. No wonder those poor exiles were heart-broken, many dying on the long, weary journey of pure homesickness. Longfellow has put into his well-known poem, 'Evangeline,' the sad story of their persecution and wandering, and not the least of the interest attaching to our trip were the associations connecting these diverse scenes with the almost real Evangeline and Gilbert. There, along the shores of Lake Pontchartrain, they wandered, and here, in the parish of Avoyelles, they passed each other without recognition.

"It is in this region we find the pre-historic earth-works of whose origin no one knows anything at all. The time-honored 'oldest inhabitant' can tell you nothing, except that his grandfather could tell him nothing about them, save that from his earliest remembrance they were there, and even then covered by immense trees, most of which were many decades old. Driving along the level, white, sandy roads, shaded by these magnificent trees, many of which are kingly magnolias, draped in the long, grey moss, we gave rein to imagination and peopled this weird region with a brawny and fierce race who might have thrown up these mysterious earthworks, which, by the way, are not at all like the so-called Indian mounds found in many of the states, but more nearly resemble the breast-works thrown up during the Civil war.

"Many of the names met with in Longfellow's poem are borne by the descendants of the old Arcadians of the present day. They, at least, are happy enough, the shadow having long since passed from their lives in the sunny Southland. But they are yet a distinct people, and their half, or wholly uneducated French or Italian neighbor will readily point them out as 'Cajuns.' For poet or historian they afford rich material, and the theme has not yet been adequately used, much less exhausted. ROSE LANE BROWN, Athens, Tenn.

From Lake Pontchartrain to Tampa Bay is only a step for the imagination, and we are still in the Sunny South with our next correspondent.

"Half way down the western coast of Florida is Tampa Bay, noted as being the starting point of De Soto on his march across the continent. At the head of this bay is the city of the same name, which, up to 1880, was simply a little village; but in that year the Plant system of railways entered its borders, and from that time its growth has been truly American in its rapidity. In 1890 the great Tampa hotel was opened, and the city became a famous winter resort. This hotel is one of the finest in the United States if not in the world, being built in Moorish style with horse-shoe arches through all its scheme, and gleaming minarets rising ing two hundred feet into the air. Inside the hotel is finished and furnished in magnificent style, statues, vases, hangings and furniture having been imported from Europe at great cost for its adornment. Indeed, it seems more like a palace than a hotel. Around it are gardens cared for by a skillful gardener and filled with rare and curious plants and trees. In the grounds are an opera house with a natorium attached and an exhibition building in which is gathered a collection of Floridian plants, fish, birds, shells and curiosities.

"In 1893 cigar manufacturers from Havana and Key West began moving to Tampa, bringing with them a host of Cuban and Spanish workmen who, being an open-handed race, gave a great impetus to the general business of the city, and in a short time it had street railways, electric lights, and all the other appliances of a modern city. Its older industries have thriven as well, and at this time it is the largest fish market in the South; it ships thousands of boxes of oranges per day during the winter; from the northern portion of the state thousands of carloads of phosphate pass through the city to the deep water at Port Tampa, while nearly as many carloads of vegetables from the southern part pass through, bound northward.

It is the cigar trade, however, that gives Tampa its importance; bringing, as it does, two million dollars into the city in each year. This business also gives it the air of a Spanish city, since out of a population of twenty-five thousand at least twelve thousand are Cuban or Spanish. The Spanish language is heard everywhere, and is a regular branch of study in the city high school. Many Spaniards have business houses here to supply the needs of their countrymen who have settled in the city, and the localities which they inhabit have a very foreign appearance and atmosphere.

"During the Cuban rebellion many refugees settled here and made this point the center of activity against the Spanish Government, the cigar makers devoting a part of their wages to the patriot cause and outfitting several filibustering expeditions for Cuba; and finally in 1898, Tampa was, for months, the point where the American army was mobilized for the invasion of Cuba."

ARTHUR M. MURPHY, Andote, Florida.

Evidently our correspondents appreciate the delights of a mild climate at this bleak season of the year for here is another letter from our Southern coast.

"In the spring of the year, all through the northern belt of the United States, the farmers are at work making maple sugar and syrup from the sap which flows from the maple trees. In the fall the process of sugar making is transferred to the Southern states, and instead of the sap from trees being used it is the juice of the sugar cane which is boiled down to make the sweet product.

"When the sugar cane is growing it looks from a little distance like a field of corn, except that there are no ears upon the stalks. I got myself well laughed at by the planter and his men alike when, in my northern ignorance, I asked what time of the year they planted the seed for a cane crop and what the seed was like. It seems that the seed of the cane plant does not mature except under very favorable conditions. The climate must be very moist and hot to have the seed come to maturity. I was told that there is no place in the United States where it matures in the open air. New plants are propagated from shoots. Each fall, when the crop is harvested, as many good vigorous stalks are saved out as the planter thinks he will need for the next year's new crop. These stalks are 'laid down' in long trenches, and covered with earth. In the spring when the ground begins to get warm they are uncovered. The long stalks have many joints, like a stalk of corn, and in almost every one of these joints the bud of a vigorous new shoot will be starting. The stalks are cut up into pieces so as to leave at least one good bud on each piece, and then these are set out in drills as corn is planted. Each bud grows to be a stalk of cane. In many cases, too, the roots of last year's crop are kept alive and another crop raised from them.

"Before the cane is cut the leaves, which are like corn leaves, are stripped off and saved for fodder. The stalks of cane are then cut and drawn to the place where they are to be ground. The stalks are full of rich, sweet juice, so delicious to the taste that all through the fall everybody in the South 'chews cane.' One sees the stalks in the fruit shops in town, kept for sale just as fruit or candy is kept. Children going to school carry as much cane with them as they can beg, and men sitting on the fences chew cane and talk. Before the cane can be eaten the outer bark is peeled off with a jackknife, for this bark is hard and tasteless. The joints are next cut out, as these are tough. What is left is a crisp white morsel which looks and tastes like celery steeped in maple syrup.

"The process called grinding is not grinding at all, but crushing. The stalks of cane are fed between two heavy steel rollers running close together. These squeeze the juice out of the stalks. This juice is boiled in large pans until it forms a thick yellow syrup. On the great plantations of Louisiana the process of sugar making is carried on in large factories with modern machinery. On somewhat smaller plantations the process is as shown in the picture I send. On such a plantation as this there would be raised each year from twenty to fifty acres of cane. A small engine runs the grinding machinery and a permanent brick arch under a shed furnishes conveniences for boiling. There are thousands of still smaller farmers who raise a little patch of cane, just enough for the use of their own families. Some man who has a mule and a little capital builds a rude brick arch out of doors and sets up a small mill run by driving a mule hitched to a long sweep. The small farmers in the community draw their cane to this man's mill to be made into syrup, paying him a certain sum for his work or giving him toll out of the syrup, just as country grist mills are paid by a toll out of the grain they grind."

ALBERT A. HATCH, Eufaula, Alabama.

There, I think that is the end of the letters for this month, so we must say good-by, and separate until the first of April. AUNT MINERVA.

CATARH CAN BE CURED.

Catarh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. RICH ART TABLE COVER FREE. Armenian Needlework Designs So Closely Followed as to Defy Detection.

Read How You May Get this Splendid Japanese Gift for Your Own Home. The most gifted race in the world with the needle are the Orientals. For centuries the rich and varied designs worked by their hands have been the admiration and delight of lovers of art. A few years ago an American was fortunate enough to invent machinery that would reproduce these rich designs of embossed embroidery and needlework, even to the delicate films of gold-thread work. Still more curious the Japanese obtained plans and made similar machinery, so they have the addition of "cheap labor" to Yankee machinery. In this way the most delicate Armenian and Turkish needlework is imitated so closely that none but the expert, on close examination, reveals the minor points of imitation.

An Art Table Cover Free. We wish to introduce Oxiene Nazone Naive into thousands of new homes and to accomplish this intend to actually give away these rich and ornamental Table Covers to our friends. We send the goods on credit and trust to your honor in returning the money, 50c. arrives. ## $59.50 IN PRIZES. Comfort's Laughable Picture Puzzle.

At the left we print a dissected square of seven pieces in many colors, while above the artist has shown a few of the many cute and grotesque imitations of the human figure which can be made from the various arrangements of these cut up pieces.

DIRECTIONS. Cut out the several pieces and paste them neatly on light cardboard. Then study the arrangement of them and you will be surprised at the great number of different figures you will be able to make. When you have hit upon what you think the cutest and most grotesque arrangement resembling the human figure (one is enough), paste the pieces on a clean sheet of paper just large enough to go into an envelope as per conditions below and address to COMFORT PUZZLE DESK, Augusta, Maine.

CONDITIONS. HOW TO WIN A PRIZE. Each contestant for the Prizes must themselves be a paid in advance subscriber to "COMFORT" and secure one 6 months' trial subscriber sending the 10c. for same with their arrangement of the Puzzle.

Address COMFORT PUZZLE DESK, Augusta, Maine.

THE BALANCING PENNY.

Bend the hairpin into the form as shown at the left. Use the narrow loop of this as a clip to hold the penny, bending the wire closer and closer till you have the penny secure.

Hang the ring on the hook at the opposite end of the wire and then proceed to balance it as shown in illustration.

THE TUMBLING CUBES.

Gaze steadily at the center when you will see alternately one cube on the top of two cubes, or two cubes on the top of one cube. The cubes, in fact, appear to be continuously turning topsy-turvy as shown in the above small illustrations.

The Misleading Railway Track.

These four lines below are exactly parallel though they appear to converge.

THE DEAD DOGS. The two dogs are obviously dead. Required by the addition of four lines to restore them to life again. How is it done? Solution will be given in COMFORT next month. Take advantage of Prize Offer above and you will receive copy of COMFORT containing solution.

To balance an egg on the point of a walking stick. Have the egg boiled hard. Thrust the two forks into the cork, one on each side, so that they shall form an angle of about 60 degrees to each other. Hold the stick ferule upwards firmly between the knees—etc., as in illustration.

The deceptive Geometrical figures. The sides A to B are all the same length. Measure them.

How to Build a Boat.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY H. EDWARD SWIFT.

Copyright, 1902, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

MOST boys are looking ahead to the coming of summer and some are even planning what they will do. If a boy has a mechanical turn of mind nothing will give him more enjoyment and satisfaction than to build a boat. The following description will give all the instructions necessary to build a boat twelve ft. long. Take ten or eleven boards not over 7-8 of an inch thick, 7 inches wide and about 13 feet long. Also 2 boards 7-8 inch thick, 14 inches wide and 13 ft. long, free from knots. These are for the side boards and should be of good clear stock, of pine or cedar, so they can be bent alike. Cut a piece shaped like Fig. 1, the length over all being 4 feet, the width 12 inches, the length on the bottom side 3 feet and 6 inches. This is for a cross board. Make a similar piece of oak, if you can get it, 28 inches long, 10 inches wide, and the length of the bottom edge, 22 inches. This is for the stern piece. The ends of each side board should be sawed off like the ends of the cross board making the short side of the board about 8 inches shorter than the longer. Beginning 4 feet from the ends of the side boards you wish for the stern end, taper them back to 10 inches wide, on one side only. Set the side boards B B, Fig. 2, on edge parallel with the longer edge uppermost and at about the middle place the cross board A A, Fig. 2, on edge parallel with the longer edge uppermost. Nail the side boards lightly to the cross board and with ropes draw the two ends of the side boards together, the other ends draw to the stern piece C, Fig. 2. Make a stern piece by cutting grooves in a piece of oak 16 inches long as shown in Fig. 3. These grooves should be 7-8 of an inch deep, so that the side boards can be securely fastened to them when they are drawn together. See that the ends of the side boards fit nicely in these grooves and then nail them with galvanized nails if you can get them. Then fasten the stern piece in the same way. Then carefully turn the boat over. The bottom boards can now be nailed on after placing the edges of the side boards so they will make a good joint all along the bottom, after which a bottom board 8 inches wide should be put inside the whole length of the boat to stiffen the bottom. Of course you have to knock out the cross board to do this. It will be well to put brackets where the stern piece joins the side boards on the top as in Fig. 4. Then in the stern about 6 inches from the top edge nail a cleat on each side parallel to the top for a seat 14 inches wide, also put in a seat the same distance from the top edge 5 feet from the stern and another half-way between this and the bow. Cover the bow of the boat 18 inches back from the stern as shown in Fig. 5, and then fit two gunwale pieces 2-1/2 inches wide on the sides the whole length of the boat as shown at A A in Fig. 6. B in Fig. 6 shows the seat in place. These should be fitted at the bow as in Fig. 7, so as to give a finished effect to the whole structure. If it is not convenient to get row locks, round holes may be bored in the gunwales about 3 inches apart and 9 inches astern of each seat. The holes should be seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and fitted with oak pins 6 inches long, so that when the pins are in place they will project about four inches above the gunwale.

Then in the stern about 6 inches from the top edge nail a cleat on each side parallel to the top for a seat 14 inches wide, also put in a seat the same distance from the top edge 5 feet from the stern and another half-way between this and the bow. finished effect to the whole structure. If it is not convenient to get row locks, round holes may be bored in the gunwales about 3 inches apart and 9 inches astern of each seat. The holes should be seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and fitted with oak pins 6 inches long, so that when the pins are in place they will project about four inches above the gunwale.

This boat should have a keel of oak seven-eighths of an inch thick and two inches wide reaching from stern piece to stern with a wider triangular piece at the stern as shown in Fig. 8, to make the boat row steady. This can be made into a centerboard by putting in a centerboard. Make a centerboard box 4 ft. long and 10 inches wide as shown in Fig. 9 and then cut a hole lengthwise in the bottom of the boat 3 ft. and 8 inches long through the bottom, keel and inside board (this should be 1 inch wide) after which securely nail the box in place after having covered the bottom edges with white lead or thick paint. The centerboard box should be made to take a seven-eighths inch centerboard easily allowing for swelling. The board can be hinged as shown in Fig. 10 or can be used straight, simply sliding down the required depth. If hinged as in Fig. 10 fasten a cord A, to the centerboard B, hung on the pin C, to raise and lower the board as circumstances require. Make a rudder and tiller as in Fig. 11: the rudder should be 17 inches long and 12 inches wide, with a tiller 15 inches long all made of oak seven-eighths of an inch thick nicely finished and shellacked. The boat is now ready to paint as the owner may fancy. Cut a hole 4 inches in diameter 12 inches from the bow as shown in Fig. 5 and put a step in the bottom of the boat directly under this to support the mast, which should be about 12 ft. long, 4 inches in diameter at the base, slightly tapered to the top. The sail can be of No. 1 duck and should be cut as in Fig. 12 which will give ample sail for a boat of this style. If you wish to use a sprit, a pole one and one-fourth inches in diameter placed as shown in the cut and secured to the mast by a loose loop is as easy as any thing to make, or you can use a boom and gaff, in which case the mast could be 18 inches longer and the base of the sail 2 ft. longer. The extra length of mast will allow for the hoisting of the sail which should be secured by wooden or iron hoops at intervals of one foot. The whole would probably cost complete about twelve dollars; without the centerboard, rudder mast and sail the boat would cost about six dollars. A good deal will depend upon the ability and good judgment of the boy who builds the boat as to what the boat looks like when finished, but if care is used and the foregoing directions followed closely you will have a good boat and a fast sailer in smooth water.

NED TODD

The Oklahoma Detective, —OR— The Strange Cabin in the Wilderness.

BY HENRY DALE.

Author of "Boomers and Cattle Kings," "The Cheyenne Outbreak," "Shadowing a Shadow," "Chepita," "Mormonism Unveiled," Etc.

Copyright, 1902, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

The opening chapters of this intensely interesting story appeared in February COMFORT. Back numbers may be obtained by enclosing three cents to COMFORT, Augusta, Me., for each number desired.

During the past year portions of Indian Territory were added to settlement by the Government allotment of lots by chance, and the scenes that were enacted in the years gone by, when Oklahoma was the objective point of settlers from east and west, north and south, were again presented in a much more exciting manner. A Kansas telephone girl lucky secured a lot valued at $17,000, and others were nearly as fortunate.

Because of the exciting events that have transpired in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, events that have attracted the attention of the whole country, the story of "Ned Todd" is presented to our readers in the hope that instruction and entertainment may be derived from its perusal.

CHAPTER IV.

THE IDIOT'S STRANGE WARNING.

Ned Todd and his youthful companion sat with their backs to the window through which the baleful eyes of the Oklahoma bandit gleamed. It was now so dark that it is quite doubtful if they could have seen him, even if they had been looking in his direction.

Supper over, the two men rose from the table and walked to the front room. There lying on the floor kicking and chuckling, was the idiot. The youth paused a moment and gazed upon the wretched creature. Like some animal, he rolled upon the rug, sometimes chuckling and hugging it, as if it were the object of his warmest affections.

"Major, is he not a strange looking man?" asked Archie.

"Yes."

"And so unfortunate."

For a moment both stood and gazed at the idiot, who ceased his giggling and raising his head, gazed about the apartment with more shrewdness than they thought he possessed. Only Ned Todd, the Ranger, and Archie were in sight. On his elbows like a walrus he raised himself, and gazed about him for several moments, at last fixing his eyes on the youth before him. Then all of a sudden he fell down and began to giggle and roll over on his rug, kicking his feet about in every direction.

"Let us take a look at the horses, and see that they do not break through the corral, and stray off," said Todd.

The youth assented, and the two left the house. It was now quite dark. The moon was just beginning to rise, and the sky was cloudless, but there were so many shadows made by the tall forests, that it was even at this time almost dark.

"That is a very singular idiot," said the youth, as they walked toward the horses.

"Yes he is."

"Did you notice how he looked at me?"

"I did."

"Did you see what he did?"

"He looked at you."

"More than that."

"What was it?"

"He winked at me."

"He did?—and what did you do?"

"I winked back."

The border detective was silent for a few moments, and then said:

"Well it may only be the eccentricity of an idiot."

"So it may, but I will venture the assertion that that fellow has more sense than he gets credit for."

"There are our horses," said the ranger detective, as they paused near the tired animals. The moon had risen, and to a certain extent the great gloomy old forest was lighted up by its soft, refulgent rays.

"Don't you think it very strange that we should find people living here?" Archie asked.

"Yes, somewhat," the border detective answered. "Yet there may be a reason for all this seclusion. This man probably thinks that the boomers will ultimately be expelled by the soldiers, and the best thing that he can do is to live apart by himself."

"The soldiers may never find him here."

"It would be an accident if they did."

They turned to retrace their steps to the house. The moon was high enough now to shed a glorious light upon the dark aisles and narrow paths of the forest.

Suddenly Archie Holland started back and clutched the arm of his companion.

"What is the matter?" Ned asked.

"I saw a form in the woods on our left flitting about."

"What was it like?"

"I only caught a glimpse of it, and cannot say exactly what it is like; but I believe it was a man."

Each had instinctively laid his hand upon his revolver, and paused on the defensive. But as there came no sound, not even the crackling of a twig, the border detective said:

"You were certainly mistaken, Archie. It could not have been a man or we would have heard him. It was more likely a bird flying about to find a roosting place."

"I don't know what it was," Archie answered. "But I think after our experience of the day, we had better keep a sharp lookout. Things have a very mysterious appearance here."

"This Oklahoma mystery is deepening,"

Todd answered, and his brow gathered into a troubled knot of cords and wrinkles. As they wended their way to the house, the youth remembering his mission to this wilderness, sighed and mentally ejaculated:

"Oh father, father! where are you now, that I may fly to your side, and release you from bondage."

When they reached the house, they found the idiot asleep on his sheepskin rug, and their old host sat in one corner near the great open fireplace smoking his pipe.

A tallow dip candle burning on the mantel, but dimly lighted the room.

"Set down," growled the sullen host, pointing to a couple of chairs.

The weary travelers complied with his request, and Archie's eyes began to wander restlessly about the apartment. Over the door was a gun rack in which lay a rifle. Over the mantel was another gun rack and another gun. Standing in one corner of the room, leaning against the wall was a double-barreled shot gun. Then there were two or three pistol holsters, from which the butts of revolvers protruded, hanging from pegs on the wall.

"This solitary old man seems very well armed," thought Archie. He was about to speak to the border detective, when that personage turning to their host asked:

"How many sons have you?"

For a moment the old man seemed a little confused, but recovering himself, answered:

"Two."

"Where are they?"

"Down at the Boomers' camp."

There was nothing unreasonable in this, yet being in a land of mystery and danger, it was but natural that the detective should have his suspicions constantly on the alert.

Minutes glided by in silence. The old man sat in the corner smoking his pipe, and the idiot snored on the hearth. At last the host kicked the cripple saying:

"Quit that, Snap, make less noise."

The idiot chuckled and kicked his feet out as if he were highly delighted, and the host sank back in his heavy oaken chair and smoked.

border detective."

"Who? Todd?"

"Yes, nobody but Ned Todd."

The old man shrugged his shoulders and cast nervous glances behind him. After a few moments he said:

"Then we'd better wait until they are sound asleep."

"Yes."

"Get the entire force here by midnight."

The chief bowed and withdrew. In three or four seconds he had disappeared into the dark, gloomy old forest.

In the meantime Ned Todd and Archie had been left alone in their room, and to their not pleasant reflections.

"Major," said the youth, thoughtfully, "if we had obtained more complete explanation from Oklahoma Peg, we could have determined on our course with certainty."

The detective who had been busy with his thoughts, said:

"It's all a mystery to me. I cannot get heads or tails of it. I wish I could understand it, but I can't."

For some moments all was quiet, and both men were busy thinking. Then the youth yawned and turned his eyes toward the miserable bed in the corner of the room. The detective asked him if he were sleepy.

"Yes, and tired, too," was the answer, "but do you think that we dare to go to sleep?"

"One of us must stay awake," he answered.

"Then there is danger?"

"There may be. In this wilderness we may face a thousand perils before we know it."

"You can sleep and I will take the first watch," said Archie.

"You will have to keep your eyes and ears open."

"I know it."

There was a small window in the gable end of the house, from which they could get a partial view of the country and forest beyond. Here Archie took his position as guard. His companion, without removing his clothing, threw himself on the bed, one hand clasping the butt of a revolver.

A MYSTERIOUS PUZZLE.

Solve the Name of this Distinguished American and His Title.
Money Sometimes Comes to Us from Figures Like a Reflection in a Mirror.

IT ALL DEPENDS ON THE POINT OF VIEW.

A pretty girl seldom looks into a glass darkly. The above illustration at first glance will remind you somewhat of the American flag on which are written a few figures. But at second glance the figures do not seem to be just right and something is wrong, yet if you looked at the puzzle in the right way you will find the name of a distinguished American and his title.

Who is it and when was he born? If you have been smart and used your brain as well as eyes in reading all this advertisement you would have noticed we gave you valuable information in solving the puzzle, but that is not all, it requires careful study, thought and persistence to accomplish any important matter. Much depends on how you look at a thing and sometimes reflections solve the mystery. Now put on your thinking-cap and hold the puzzle before the right object and you may find the golden answer. When you have solved the mystery send your answer, enclosing the puzzle in your letter, to the Editor of COMFORT.

Your answer may be made on a postal with either ink or pencil. Remember, this is a free contest and we are not to be paid for the puzzle. If you find the correct answer write us at once. "We have had a long, hard day's travel," said the border detective, "can you show us at once to our beds?"

"Umph, hump!" he growled rising and taking a candle from the mantel. "Foller me."

Up a narrow, cramped flight of stairs into an attic chamber the weary travelers were conducted.

As they left the room, the idiot giggled and chuckled, rolling over on the floor in apparent delight. At the moment they left the apartment, a dark, sinister face appeared at the narrow window.

"I have 'em now," a voice whispered, so faintly that it sounded like nothing more than the wind among the trees. "They are as good as dead now."

This seemed to amuse the idiot, for he screamed and chuckled until the face had disappeared from the window, when he once more became quiet and settled down to his nap.

The footsteps of the host could be heard descending the stairway. There was a smile on his sinister face, and he shook his great shaggy head as if he were well pleased with what had been done.

"Tap, tap, tap!" The tapping was at the rear of the building, and so very light was it that the host could scarce believe at first that he heard it at all. He listened a moment to assure himself, but it came again with such distinctness that he knew some one was there awaiting him. He went to the kitchen, and from there to the rear door, which he opened, saying:

"Who is there?"

"It's me—"

He easily recognized the voice as his chief-tain's.

"Well, what do you want?" Bryce asked.

"Where are they?"

"In the attic bedroom."

"Asleep?"

"Not yet, they have just gone up. Where are the men?"

"Only three are here yet."

"Are they enough?"

"I don't think they are. That fellow is the

An hour passed and the youthful guard sat nodding in the chair by the window. Not a sound which could be called suspicious had as yet fallen on his ears. His eyes grew heavy, and despite himself closed. Before he knew it he was dozing.

At this moment a slight creaking was heard at the head of the stairway, and the guard was in an instant wide awake, sitting bolt upright, his revolver cocked.

"What was it," began the youth, but a signal from the detective checked further utterances.

There came a faint rapping sound at the door. It was only momentary, and when it had ceased, the youth looked at his companion for some explanation of it, but by a gesture he enjoined silence and they listened.

"Tap, tap, tap," very low and faint came the rapping at the door.

In a moment Archie's revolver was aimed at the door.

"No, no, that will not do," whispered the detective. "Suppose it should be a friend come to warn us?" Holding a revolver in one hand and a knife in the other, he crept to the door, where he paused and whispered through the keyhole:

"Who's there?"

He leaped back the moment he had asked the question, as if he expected a bullet from the outside to be his answer. But no shot was fired. A voice, seeming to come from the bottom of the door, whispered:

"A friend."

The ranger was cautious, yet he could not but believe that it was really a friend. An enemy would not have come to them in this way. He carefully opened the door, so as to get a glimpse of the person without. He was astonished to discover standing before him the idiot cripple. The amazement of both Todd and Archie can be better imagined than described.

The idiot put his crooked, mis-shapen fingers to his lips and whispered:

"Be cautious!"

"What do you want?" Todd asked.

"Let me and I will tell you," and he chuckled in his old idiotic manner, as if the habit had so fastened itself upon him that he could not get rid of it. With scarcely any perceptible noise, notwithstanding his deformity, he entered the room. "They think me a fool," he said, pausing to press his hand upon his forehead. "Bryce, Burton, and Dyke all think me a fool, but I am not."

This was said in a scarcely audible whisper after the door had been closed. The two men were standing in front of the idiot gazing at him with deep interest. The poor fellow seemed to be puzzling himself to gather up his scattered faculties, but after a few moments he again said:

"They think me a fool, but they are mistaken, he, he, he, I will yet prove too shrewd for them."

"Who do you mean?" the detective asked, for the fellow had again made a pause. His manner seemed at once to change.

After a desperate struggle, he gathered up his scattered faculties, and concentrating his mind on the subject of which he intended to speak, he said in a whisper:

"Do you know that you are in danger?"

"I suspect it, but did not really know," answered the detective.

"You are in deadly peril."

"From whom?"

For a moment the strange man seemed lost in reflection. He rubbed his scarred, mis-shapen face with his deformed hand, and asked:

"Have you heard of Captain Snell?"

"Yes."

"That's the name he goes by. He is the mysterious man of Oklahoma."

"Where is he? Is he the man whom we found here?" asked Archie.

"No, no," the cripple answered, shaking his head. "He has not been in sight, but he will be before morning. This is his stronghold, and if you remain here you will not live to see sunrise. It would be better to lie down and sleep in a den of wolves, than here amid these Oklahoma outlaws."

CHAPTER V.

THE TRAVELERS LOSE THEIR HORSES.

The cripple stood for a moment gazing up at the ceiling, as if he were trying to gather his scattered ideas. Beneath his rough, scarred face, shaggy, unkempt hair and beard, the close observer could readily discover the wreck of what were once exceedingly fine features.

Archie was sure there was something familiar about him, but he was at a loss to say what it was. As he was gazing at him, the youth was saying to himself:

"Did I ever meet that unfortunate man before? No, surely not. That face is strange to me, and yet there seems something about it that is familiar."

The cripple, in the meanwhile, realizing the danger of the travelers, said:

"You must go away from here. You must fly for your lives. Every moment that you delay only increases your danger. They are coming to kill you. I heard them say so when they thought me asleep."

The cripple then turned about, and despite his clubbed feet, noiselessly and rapidly crept down the narrow, cramped stairway. It seemed impossible for him to move those mis-shapen feet and hands without making some noise, but he did so. When he had gone, Archie turned to his companion and said:

"What does he mean?"

For a moment Ned Todd stood staring at the half open door, his whole attention given to the faculty of hearing. There was not a sound to break the calm, and after having assured himself that there was no one to hear him, he said:

"His warning may be only the insane twaddle of an idiot, yet it is sufficient for us to give it some consideration. We will make a careful examination of the premises. What can you see from that window?"

"Nothing but the forest, and moon in the sky."

Todd carefully closed the door.

"The moon shines brightly, and we ought to be able to get a view of something from the window."

"But there is a big hackberry tree growing almost against the house, which cuts off all view in the rear."

"We can utilize that tree," said Todd coming to the window.

"How?"

"Make it a ladder to climb down on."

"I had not thought of that. Do you suppose it will be necessary to resort to that plan of escape?"

"Yes."

"Why, there is no sign of danger. There is not a single sound that would alarm any one."

"But it is sometimes most dangerous when there is the least noise," said the border detective. They had brought their repeating rifles with them to their rooms, and their pistols were about their waists, so that they were well armed.

"Had we better look after the horses?" asked the youth.

"Yes, but there may be more danger in that than we think. I do not feel like running away, for, if this is the rendezvous of a banditti, as the idiot says, it is my duty to ferret them out, and bring them to justice. If it is not, then we have no cause to be running away."

"What would you advise?" asked Archie.

"Go out and reconnoitre."

"Well, I am ready."

"But only one must go. The other can remain here and keep a sort of guard," said the border detective.

"Is it not bad policy to divide our forces?" asked Archie.

"No, if these are bandits, they will not make their appearance before midnight."

"Who will reconnoitre?"

"I will go," said Ned Todd. "It may require some experience and shrewdness to manage business outside. In here, all that is necessary is courage and coolness, which with you are natural."

Going to the window the border detective climbed out upon the branches of the tree.

His movements were so cautious that he scarce made any noise at all. Archie stood within the apartment watching the man as he descended the tree and disappeared from view. When within a few feet from the earth, the border detective dropped silently to the ground and rose and hurried away to the horses.

"The whole country has been so dangerous to good horses," he thought, "that I am inclined to the opinion our animals are in more danger than ourselves."

The engine, without the 50-ton tender, weighs one hundred and thirty tons—twenty-one times as much as the historic DeWitt Clinton.

An instrument has been perfected by a man in Jamestown, N. Y., for signalling between trains on the same railroad track. It is based on the wireless telegraph principle, and signals automatically when two trains are within two thousand feet of each other. It also indicates in which direction each of the two are running, or if one of them is standing still on the track.

To disintegrate wood fibre the material is crushed and disintegrated in lime water for some days. It is then treated to alternating current of electricity at a voltage of about forty. The inventor of this new process claims that the alternating current very considerably increases the speed of fermentation in the agglutinants of wood fibre, thus preparing it for lixivation and bleaching.

A new device for protecting bearings from heating has been patented. An ordinary oil-cup is placed on the bearing to be protected, and has communication through the usual opening. This opening is, however, closed at its lower end by means of a fusible plug that will be melted at a low temperature. Should the shaft or bearing become heated to a sufficient degree, owing to the neglect of the attendant or from any other cause, the plug will be fused or liquified by the heat, thereby releasing the oil.

A GIFT OF EMBROIDERY SILK.
Embroidery silk will cost you a lot of money bought at the store. We have a great jobbing-house lot of rich silk bought at wholesale. No high retail price with a lot of middle profits; but we get actual cost price. We want to give the whole benefit to our lady readers. We have prepared a lot of assorted packages containing a liberal supply of bright, rich, new silk in a variety of tones and shades, which would cost a heap of money bought at the stores. We will send our illustrated bargain list and full assorted, large sized silk package for the ridiculously low price of ten cents; or, three packages for twenty cents. Write to-day before the rush. S. W. LANE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

Comfort Clubs.

For the benefit of our readers who live in the smaller towns and remote communities, COMFORT proposes the organization of Comfort Clubs whose object shall be to add to the comfort of living by bringing people together for their mutual instruction, improvement and amusement.

Knowing that social pleasures are lacking in the smaller places more because people do not know how to organize and what to do that is interesting and pleasing, than because they do not care for such things, COMFORT will undertake to suggest ways and means by which the young people, at least, may pass many winter evenings which would otherwise hang heavily.

First: The clubs, to be known as Comfort Clubs, are to have their membership from among subscribers to COMFORT, and ten persons or less may constitute a Club. In communities where there are more than ten eligibles, Clubs A, B, C, etc., may be organized, the objects of these divisions being to make it possible for sets of persons to make up their own clubs, for such meetings as they may wish to have. But each month there must be a regular meeting of the whole Club at which all members may attend and take part in the exercises.

Second: The monthly meeting should be held in some large room (church or town hall) and members are to read, recite, sing play on some instrument, or act a short piece, the whole to conclude with some interesting game which COMFORT will present. COMFORT will also provide the program each month for the monthly meeting, so that members need only carry out the program which will be furnished them. Division meetings may be held at private houses of members of the divisions, and once a week if so desired.

Third: The officers of Comfort Clubs shall consist of President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer, four in all, and to be elected by the Club, once a year. There are to be no fees of any kind, but if at any time the Club wishes to raise money for any charity, small admittance may be charged at the usual monthly meeting. This can only be done by vote of the Club. Every member shall be entitled to invite two persons, not members, to attend any meeting, general or division.

Fourth: Each member shall wear a badge or button indicating membership, COMFORT agreeing to furnish appropriate badges without cost to members.

These general rules, which will be modified and improved as the needs of Clubs develop, are now given as a basis upon which to organize the pioneer Clubs, and COMFORT will be pleased to hear from our lady readers all over the land concerning their willingness to undertake the good work. COMFORT will also be glad to render all the assistance in its power to aid the cause of making life cheerier and brighter, and increasing good will and good fellowship among mankind. A special prize will be awarded to the first club organizing and reporting to this office, which organization may take place immediately upon receipt of this notice. Various annual prizes, to be determined later, will be awarded to Clubs for excellence in attendance, numbers, etc.

Address all communications to Comfort Club Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Method of Organization of Clubs.

Let the person undertaking the organization notify six or more subscribers to COMFORT at the same postoffice to meet at a designated house, or room, and when they have come together, simply state the object of the organization of the club, as announced in COMFORT and get the sense of the meeting as to organizing. If a majority favor it, proceed at once to organization by naming two or more persons, male or female as candidates for President, first. Then pass slips of blank paper around for each person to write thereon the name of his or her choice for the office, and the one receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared President. Proceed in the same way for Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Then the person who has called the meeting will retire and the new officers will take charge, the President in the chair, conducting the meeting, and the Secretary acting as clerk making the minutes. The President will announce the program and call off the order of business naming those who are set down as taking individual parts.

The main idea is to have this part of the club's work as simple as it can possibly be, so that members will find the duties a pleasure rather than a burden, the object of the club being the greatest comfort to the greatest number.

Comfort Club Program.

- 1—Meeting called to order by President.
- 2—Reading minutes of previous meeting; by Secretary.
- 3—Admission of members.
- 4—Other business, if any.
- 5—Intermission of five minutes—conversation.
- 6—Recitation.
- 7—Vocal selection—solo or concerted number.
- 8—Instrumental selection—any instrument.
- 9—Intermission of five minutes—conversation.
- 10—Comfort Club Game, for all present. (See below.)
- 11—"Auld Lang Syne," sung by the club.
- 12—Announcements for following month by the Vice President.
- 13—"The Star Spangled Banner," sung by all present, standing.
- 14—Good Night.

A Comfort Club Game.

A lively game as part of the evening's amusements is to see who can thread the greatest number of needles in the least time, the elderly people being allowed to use glasses. Pass around to all in the company pieces of thread about a foot long with a large knot in one end. Then have three or four plates with a paper of needles emptied in each put around the room where they can be conveniently got at by the threaders. At a signal from the President or whoever is master of ceremonies, the threading begins and continues five minutes. The needles on each string are then counted, and the person having threaded the highest number of needles is given a simple prize, whatever it may be. The person having the lowest number gets the "booby" prize, which may be a tin horn or a monkey climbing a stick, or any ridiculous thing. If two or more persons have the same number they are to draw straws to determine who is the winner.

The Tallest and Shortest Couple Game.
As this game is somewhat short another to go with it, and which will cause much sport, is to see who the tallest and the shortest couples in the company. In this game a young lady passes a hat filled with slips of paper numbered from one up to as many as are necessary, among the gentlemen, and a young gentleman passes similar slips among the ladies. Each one takes a number until all are supplied. Then the young man having a certain number say ten, goes around among the ladies until he finds the one having the corresponding ten, and they pair off. All the others do the same as they find their numbers. The President who measures the height of the gentleman and lady, with a yard stick or foot rule, or takes and adds their combined height. This is done with each couple and the tallest couple wins the prize, while the shortest one gets the "booby" prize. This may be varied by weighing the couples, if the grocer will loan the club his prize, the lightest getting the booby. This game affords great sport and will easily occupy all the spare time. It may do for a whole evening, if there is a large number of persons in attendance.

"YES, FATHER IS DEAD!"

It was his HEART, you know, it had been troubling him for a year. "How often we hear this story of neglected heart disease! It is increasing! 69 hearts in every hundred are wrong! Yet people won't seem to admit that it really is their heart but go on doctoring for something else when by the well known signs of Nervousness, fluttering, palpitation, skipping beats, choking, nightmare, indigestion, pain in heart and side and many others, the poor heart is saying, "I am sick. Help me! Help me!" And how strange that they don't send help when it means life or death to them and when the heart can surely be made right again. Not one case in 500 is incurable. How is your heart? You can tell better perhaps than a doctor, for you know your symptoms better than you can tell him. If you have one of them, or the least suspicion that your heart is wrong, don't wait! Find out! Even if you know that you have a settled heart disease which nothing has helped, don't give up! There is help!

Send NOW for FULL FREE BOX of Dr. Fuller's Heart & Nerve Tablets, and book by our special heart physician, and get well! Both are free. This is not a box of a few tablets but enough for a good fair treatment, and to prove that they will give you back a good sound heart and nerves. This box cures many cases. The only remedy in the world which cures, not by affecting the heart alone, but also by restoring the delicate NERVES which control it. There is no other way to cure heart disease, and no other remedy takes this way. If we didn't know what the tablets will do, how foolish for us to make this offer. Isn't it worth trying, anyway?

A. C. Howland, M. D., one of New York's most noted physicians, says, "I have never known your tablets to fail in a single case." Write your full name and address plainly. THE HEART CURE CO., 77 MASONIC BUILDING, HALLOWELL, MAINE.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

CONDUCTED BY COUSIN MARION.

The first month of spring, and the winter is going slowly from before the sun, and the flowers that it brings forth. May it be spring-time in your hearts always, and it will be, if you will try to make it so. But there is work to do in the spring and let us get at it.

The first is from Cousin Maud in Trinity county, Texas, and she asks me questions that her physician can best answer. I get a good many questions of this kind, but health is too valuable for me to tamper with, and I have no advice except to consult your physician who knows your needs best.

Flo, Walnut Creek, O.—If the young man you love wants to make up the quarrel, give him the chance and let the other one go.

S. E. A., Tippecanoe, Ohio.—Yes. (2) Girls of seventeen might have one caller a week, but it is rather young for beaux. (3) If the young man really loves you he will not go with another girl for spite. Throw him over.

Clover Blossom, Colfax, Indiana.—Take the young man back, but before you do, tell him what you have heard, and have a perfect understanding with each other.

College Chums, West Sunbury, Pa.—Country parties usually last until very late hours, but they should not continue beyond one o'clock, unless it is something out of the ordinary; and midnight is plenty late enough for most. (2) No kissing games. (3) Dances at private houses are permissible, and it is proper to go to public dances with a chaperone.

Stella, Altoona, Pa.—If you told him you loved him, that was the proper answer, no matter whether you said it gracefully or not. (2) Yes. (3) The lady does as she pleases about taking the man's arm. (4) You may go to his house if his mother or sisters are there.

Diamond, Orange Vale, Cal.—A girl of fifteen is too young to have men's company, therefore your other questions are answered in the negative.

Violet, New York, N. Y.—Don't say anything about loving the young man until he tells you he loves you. (2) The love of a girl of nineteen is not as likely to be childish as that of a man of twenty-one. She is much older than he is. (3) I am not sure. (4) The only way to show your disapproval of a man swearing before you is to tell it to him, and request that he do not offend again. If he does, don't let him talk to you any more.

Blue Eyes, Horton's Summit, Va.—The member of Congress from your district. Address: Superintendent, Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. (2) Call for the things you want in the order in which they appear on the bill of fare. (3) There is no rule about registering at a hotel. You simply walk up to the counter and tell the clerk you want a room. Ask him what the price will be. He will do the rest.

Mildred, Cross Timbers, Texas.—Treat the young man, who will never marry, but comes to see you, just as you would any other friend, and don't think of loving him any more than you do all of the others you know. In the meantime he will come around, or you will find some one to take his place.

Sweet Sixteen, Port Jervis, N. Y.—No. (2) Ordinarily, yes. (3) If you know the young man to be all right, you can accept his attentions, but you should by all means let your parents know that you have. (4) Most emphatically, yes.

Peach, Lake Crystal, Minn.—Your conundrums are too hard for me.

Primrose, Columbus, Mont.—Engagement ring on third finger of left hand. An opal is said to be unlucky. A solitaire diamond is the rule for an engagement ring. It need not be large.

M. E. B., Madison, Wis.—A photograph is often a Christmas present.

Iantha, Bellevue, Kans.—Thirty is a very suitable age for eighteen. (2) The lady leads the way into her own church. (3) The opera is quite correct. (4) A man should not call oftener than once a week or two weeks unless he is "courting," and he should leave at 10.30, or earlier. No kissing. (5) Yes, a man should stop chewing tobacco to please his sweetheart as well as for a hundred other reasons.

Black Eyes, Raleigh, N. C.—Don't marry the old widower whom you do not love. (2) Flirting is next of kin to lying, and is quite as unworthy of a man or a woman. (3) I think you are a frivolous and foolish girl who had better not marry for a long time yet, for as you now think, you will not be a good wife, and may be a very bad one.

Winifred, Scranton, Pa.—If you are quite sure of yourself, there can be no harm in visiting your friend, whatever gossips may say of you and her son.

Blue Eyes, Charlottesville, Va.—You are too young to be asking questions about beaux. Turn your attention to your studies for five years yet.

Punch, Greensboro, N. C.—It is proper to shake hands when introduced. You may ask your escort into the house if it is not too late. The lady should speak first.

White Rose, Stonewall, N. C.—Don't use a toothpick at table. (2) There is no harm in dancing. Many of the churches do not object to it. (3) Sixteen is too young for beaux.

Omaha, Omaha, Neb.—I think I would not wear the long wedding veil. (2) You will have to settle the other matters between yourselves.

May, Eros, Ark.—Why do you wish to give him up if he is such an excellent man? You may go further and fare worse.

Little Ted, Amherst, Va.—Before marrying your cousin, it will be well for you to find out if it is not a penitentiary offence.

Twin Sisters, Moultrie, O.—Wait till he sends his address. (2) Yes. (3) Say "thank you." (4) Wait till he asks for it, unless you want him to have it. (5) No.

P. S., Paducah, Ky.—Being a Kentucky girl you ought to know the answers to the questions you ask me.

Three Girls, Burnside, Mich.—Don't dance with men you do not know. (2) Better keep your photographs. (3) Until they know each other very well. (4) An engaged girl may accept another escort than her fiancé if he has no objection.

Brown Eyes, Pima, Ariz.—Tell the young man you do not wish him to come to your house so often as it provokes remark. (2) No. (3) Name the little girl Fairfax, or Phyllis, or Ruth, or Bruce, or some other name that can not have an "ie," added to it. (4) No. (5) Too much novel reading is bad, but a little is very good.

Louise, St. Paul, Minn.—Certainly not.

Housekeeper, Bristol, Conn.—I think if you had a talk with the young man in a friendly way and settled your difficulties, it would be pleasanter for all concerned. Or you might write him a note to the same purport. (2) If you find it pleasant at the dances given by the Catholic young men, I see no harm in going. If churches can't be friendly there is nothing in religion.

Minerva, Cedar Rapids, Neb.—Evidently he has not received your invitation. In any event don't give him another thought until you hear from him.

Mary, Altheimer, Ark.—A girl should have only one "beau," meaning by that her "best young man." She may accept the attention of a dozen or more in a general way. (2) The lady pays her own train fare unless she is the man's invited guest.

Violet, Pontiac, Miss.—Don't doubt the young man. Settle your doubts by frankly telling them to him and asking him to clear them up. There may always be times of doubt, but they can be cleared away by frankness.

Brown Eyed Beauty, Ironton, Mo.—Hypnotism is neither medicine nor electricity, and it is something that you should not tamper with. It is dangerous in the hands of inexperienced persons. (2) The pompadour style of hair came from Madame Pompadour of France. (3) Don't scrape your feet on the sidewalk. It is slovenly, and in some places is used as a sign to attract disagreeable attention.

Blue Bell, Redwood, Tenn.—Send your escort home if he shows signs of wanting to stay too long. (2) Thank him and say you will be very glad to go. (3) The man usually opens and closes the door. (4) In a strange church the man leads the way. (5) I have not space to give you anything about Japanese customs.

There, my dears, all of your questions are answered, except a few that have been answered many times, or were not worth the trouble, and I hope they will be of interest and profit to you, and to other people as well. By by. Cousin Marion.

The People's Poet.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

HE poems of Ella Wheeler Wilcox may not reach the highest degree of literary and poetic perfection, but they are strong in human sympathy, and they appeal to the great mass of the common people. They are often of the kind that men cut out and tuck away in their vest pockets, and that children speak in school. Some of them have been set to music, and people like to sing them. They appeal to the heart, and they often voice great truths. They are more widely copied than the poems of any other woman writer in America. It is doubtful if any poem of recent years written by an American poet has been more widely copied than Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem entitled "Solitude," which begins with—

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone,
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, and it is lost on the air;
The echoes bound to a joyful sound,
But shrink from voicing care."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox came "out from the West." She was born in Johnstown, Wisconsin, about forty years ago, and all of the years of her childhood and young womanhood were spent in the West. She began to write at a very early age, and from the first her work was popular. The first poem for which she ever received payment appeared in one of the Leslie publications, and then she began to write for several eastern family periodicals. It was not until 1883 that she wrote "Solitude," a poem that brought her more prominently before the public than anything she had written up to that time. The poem was first published in the New York Sun, and its author was paid the magnificent sum of five hundred dollars for it. The poem was suggested to Ella Wheeler while she was visiting a friend in Madison, Wisconsin. This friend had suffered a great bereavement, and it was while dressing for a ball that Ella Wheeler thought of how quickly one turns from sorrow to sunshine, and the poem was the result.

Another almost equally popular poem, containing but two stanzas, is the one entitled "Take Courage." It is the poem with which William J. Bryan concludes his book and it voices a truth that no one can deny.

"Let those who have failed to take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
The battle is not yet done;
For, sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.
O man, bowed down with labor,
O woman, young yet old,
O heart, oppressed in the toiler's breast
And crushed by the power of gold;
Keep on with your weary battle
Against triumphant might,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right."

Mrs. Wilcox's "Poems of Passion," published about twenty years ago, created a good deal of discussion, but they are not the poems that made her reputation or that her friends care for most. One of her favorite poems is "My Creed." It is a creed to which all can subscribe and it would be well if we could all live the truths contained in its brief and simple lines which are as follows:

"Who giveth love to all,
Pays kindness for unkindness, smiles for frowns,
And lends new courage to each fainting heart,
And strengthens hope and scatters joy abroad,
He, too, is a redeemer—son of God."

Ella Wheeler was married twenty years ago to Robert M. Wilcox, a prosperous business man of Meriden, Connecticut, and her home since her marriage has been in New York excepting during the summer and fall months when she lives in a charming home of her own at Short Beach, Connecticut. She is a firm believer in the gospel of cheerfulness and one does not find morbid notes in her songs. She believes also in the still higher gospel of healthfulness, and nothing gives her greater pleasure than to know that she has sent forth a poem that has been helpful to some one. She has many letters received from those to whom her poems have been helpful by inspiring them with strength to fight the battle of life.

A REMARKABLE ENDORSEMENT Of the Unequalled Qualities of the CORNISH PIANO

BY The Hon. HORACE N. ALLEN, United States Minister to Korea.

Mr. Allen who represents the United States at Seoul, Korea, purchased a Cornish piano in 1894. After an ocean voyage of some 15,000 miles, and usage for nearly eight years, subjected to the extreme heat and dampness of the Korean climate, writes as follows:

Legation of the United States of America, Seoul, Korea.
I wish to inform you of the satisfaction I have had from the Cornish Piano you sent me in 1894. It was a wise selection for this climate. It has stood the severe rainy seasons most remarkably. For four years my two boys practiced two hours daily upon it and for two years it has had a pianola attached to it and it has had to do steady service. During all this time it has only been tuned once owing to the absence of piano tuners. A tuning would not hurt it now, and yet it is not particularly out of tune. This record seems to surprise everyone, and I consider it worthy of mentioning it to you.

(Signed) HORACE N. ALLEN, U. S. Minister.
Korea, which is a semi-independent kingdom in the Far East, was the bone of contention in the China-Japanese War; it is nominally under the control of the Emperor of Japan, but England and Russia have important interests and maintain Free Trading Ports; it is about 15,000 miles away from the United States, and the climate is such that if a Piano will stand seven years of its extremes of heat and dampness, it will stand anything.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE New Moon occurs this month at about 42 minutes past 8 o'clock in the morning of the 8th day, Washington Mean Time. This new moon is an eclipsing conjunction though only a small fraction of the Sun's face will be eclipsed and it will not be visible in the United States. At the time of the eclipse nearly all the heavenly bodies will be above the earth, Neptune being the only one below the horizon and he in the Ascending house of the figure. The eclipse falls in the 18th degree of the sign Aries, only three degrees away from Mars.

Happily for our country, Mercury ruler of the scheme and the benevolent planets are the highest elevated ones in the figure and continue the good promises for us as a nation. Mars so near the Sun and Moon detracts somewhat from the measure of our good, giving indication of some degree of antagonism between the President and Congress, reflecting opposition to either measures or methods of the Chief Executive. There will be bitter debates and unpleasant criticism of the Administration in Congress, and Saturn in the 8th tends to show either friction in the Cabinet or some change in that official family.

A Total Eclipse of the Moon occurs at about 42 minutes of 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the 22nd of the month. This eclipse is not visible in the United States but will be observed quite generally throughout Europe, Asia and Africa, either at its beginning or end. A figure erected for the time of the eclipse at our seat of government in Washington shows the opposing luminaries and Mercury, ruler of the scheme, each afflicted by the fiery Mars, he being close to the Sun and Mercury near the 9th cusp. The eclipsed Moon is in the 3rd house and all four of these heavenly bodies are adversely affected by the great malefic Saturn in the 5th house. Jupiter is in the 6th and Venus in the 7th house. The effects of both these eclipses will be principally apparent in Europe, Asia and Africa rather than directly in this country, though we shall not wholly escape some of the effects. It is apprehended there will be some unusual disturbance in the religious world either through marked changes among church authorities or as to methods. Some unusual criticism or unpopularity of our Chief Executive will be apparent as to church matters. The combination also indicates some very serious disaster upon the seas, involving loss of many lives, and the unusual activity of Mars cautions us not to relax our vigilance in combating bad eruptive diseases, especially in schools and hotels. Mars, the fomenter of strife, also incites men to riotous acts and disorder, and we shall probably witness considerable excitement in some sections of the country in adjusting wages and disputes or differences between capital and labor. We trust this indication of the scheme may not be verified by any serious disorder, as the harm would be most injurious to the wives and children of those concerned, since Saturn afflicts from the 5th house.

Mars so closely afflicting the Sun in both eclipses indicates unusual excitement to the President and the governing authorities in our country generally, and the Chief Executive will not be wise to ignore safeguards from harm from viciously disposed persons. It cannot be denied that the eclipses exhibit some vicious features towards rulers across the seas, yet it is hoped that none of the evil machinations will prevail.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR APRIL, 1902.

APRIL 1—Tuesday. The morning hours are contentions and frictions and invite moderation of all hasty impulses in social, domestic and business affairs; the time promotes combustion and fires, and explosions as the month opens will be quite likely. After the early part of the day conditions improve rapidly. See that the noon and early afternoon hours are given the preference for all the major moves of the day; especially should literary enterprises be diligently pushed and mental labors will be remarkably successful and satisfactory. Crowd all commercial contracts, urge correspondence and adjustment of accounts; make written agreements, encourage educational matters, and begin mathematical and scientific labors of magnitude.

2—Wednesday. The morning gives baffling conditions such as arrests or hinders progress in matters of consequence, particularly if connected with buildings or lands. After ten in the morning let every energy be put forth for prosecution of business, especially such as concerns machinery, chemistry, or any of the manufacturing enterprises of life.

3—Thursday. This is one of the best days of the month for beginning affairs of magnitude and importance. REGULUS advises his friends to improve the moments of this day to their fullest extent. It is especially recommended for the beginning of long journeys, milling operations, metal working, and the extensive manufacture, purchase or sale of machinery. If this be the anniversary of thy birthday then these suggestions apply with even greater force and thou mayest reckon with good assurance upon a season of unusual prosperity. Buy goods for trade, engage in new enterprises; deal with public officials, judges, counselors, ecclesiastics and traders in wool and woolsens. The day and time are particularly favorable for persons born about the 1st of February, 2nd of June, or 5th of October or December of past years, and such persons have in these passing weeks marked increase of friends, improved health and unexpected and more favorable business advantages and benefits, many making benevolent changes in business or removals.

4—Friday. Continue these efforts of yesterday with unabated energy, giving preference, if any, to business pertaining to the elegant and decorative in life; make personal applications for favor from public officials and governing officers of large organizations or corporations.

5—Saturday. A day of no special promise though somewhat conducive to rashness, peevishness and excitability; especially to persons born about the 9th of March, 11th of September or 5th of October, of past years. Let all such keep strong check upon all impulses of an aggressive or contentious character just at this time or serious controversies may result.

6—Sunday. Specially conducive to mental eccentricities and indulgences in the imaginative and marvelous in literature; the evening is the best part of the day, particularly for study and reflection and mental efforts of consequence.

7—Monday. Use the forenoon of this day for moves of importance in connection with houses or lands or as to mining enterprises; execute wills, appoint trustees, engage with printers and urge all literary labors and gentleman, when also make applications for financial advantages or favor from persons of wealth or prominence in banking circles.

8—Tuesday. Partial Eclipse of the Sun. Keep thy tongue under restraint during the better part of this day, nor be rash in decision in business engagements; quarrels are easily provoked and violence will abound. It is no time to begin any important undertaking. Seek favor from persons noted for eccentricity of dress or habits.

9—Wednesday. Let the musician and artist vigorously improve this day; choose the time for decorating buildings and dealing in decorative wares of all kinds; have no business transactions with money lenders or persons connected with patents.

10—Thursday. Shun correspondence in the opening hours of this day when correspondence relating to money matters is likely to prove unfortunate and annoying; use the afternoon for business connected with real estate or in reference to the property of deceased persons.

11—Friday. Begin the day early and urge all undertakings of a scientific, literary or artistic nature and press all general business; the afternoon is less to be depended upon for any of the polite avocations or musical or dramatic engagements.

12—Saturday. A very excellent day; use the forenoon for replenishing thy stock in trade and for dealing with bankers, chemists, manufacturers, carpenters, machinists, surgeons, dentists and engineers, also for seeking promotion in the public service.

13—Sunday. A day in which the musical portion of religious worship will be unusually happy and effective; conditions conducive to special enjoyment of the elegant in literature and art and tender courtesies between the sexes particularly agreeable.

14—Monday. The forenoon is the best part of this day and should be given preference for matters of most consequence; as the day advances, however, a malevolent train of influences will prevail when no important beginning should be made; give thy landlord a wide berth nor have anything to do with real estate matters or with persons in the dirty or laborious avocations; the late hours are particularly evil and much violence and crime are induced, when also fires are excited, carefully guarded against; make no application for favor or advantage from persons in authority during this day; let all persons have care against exposing themselves to danger in wells, mines, or other underground places, especially if born about the 17th of January, 15th of April, 18th of July, or 17th of October, of past years. Such persons should look carefully to their affairs, lest by their own recklessness or haste they invite litigation and experience misfortune and loss, or in some cases suffer violent hurts or diseases; such persons are now generally excitable, contentious and quarrelsome; they are admonished that patience and discretion would prove profitable allies in the present juncture of their affairs.

15—Tuesday. Do not be in haste to begin thy duties on this day as baffling and disappointing conditions about the middle hours are the best ones and should be employed in preference to other parts of the day for the principal moves in life.

16—Wednesday. Push correspondence in the early morning hours, but keep a sharp watch over the finances in the middle hours when losses of money or valuables are quite probable; beware of signing any promise to pay or of binding thyself as surety for another.

17—Thursday. Personal applications for favor from public authorities are more likely to succeed on this day than usual and the day is excellent as well for all the honorable undertakings of life, especially those concerned with great manufacturing enterprises.

18—Friday. This day should be avoided for wooing or wedding, for conditions are decidedly treacherous and evil in this respect; many very strange and ill-sorted marriages are effected at this time, and disappointment, poverty and unhappiness will fall to the lot of the greater number who now assume the matrimonial yoke; ladies should not allow any alluring prospect of riches to influence them at this time to make any engagement of the above nature. This is especially true of ladies claiming this as their birthday or born about the middle of January, July, or October, of past years.

19—Saturday. The morning hours are the poorest but after nine in the forenoon matters concerned with building, excavating and construction should be vigorously pushed, when also dealings should be had with agriculturalists, mining concerns, plumbers, ship-builders and all classes of men engaged in the dirty and laborious avocations.

20—Sunday. One of the promising Sabbaths of the spring months, particularly conducive to the success of religious efforts and contributing physical vitality and buoyancy of spirit. Church matters are particularly favored.

21—Monday. Arise betimes and diligently urge thy several pursuits during the first two-thirds of this day, when conditions especially favor all dealings with persons of wealth and distinction, also all transactions with banks and monied institutions; use the afternoon for dealing with public men and officers of large corporations; mental labors in the night hours will be very laborious and generally unsatisfactory. Indeed, the coming twenty-four hours have little to offer of a satisfactory character; some bad burglary and violence is probable during the night hours when fires prove fierce and destructive.

22—Tuesday. Total Eclipse of the Moon. Avoid contention and do nothing hastily at this time; some bad fires and accidents now occur. Treachery and deceit are abroad, especially in the commercial and mercantile world and REGULUS cautions close scrutiny of signatures to commercial paper and against a too ready belief in representations; both tongue and pen are tempted to exaggeration and unreliable utterances; thieves and forgers are active and the criminal classes are here excited to fresh deeds of violence and cruelty. Persons born as indicated in the paragraph for the 14th instant are again admonished to have care in all their affairs.

23—Wednesday. Urge general business during the forenoon but look out for the pennies during the afternoon when extravagance is incited and unsatisfactory purchases are induced; the evening is fine for social engagements, or musical or dramatic entertainments.

24—Thursday. Take this day for all minor dealings with the laboring classes and transacting business with plumbers, tinners, gardeners and builders; let persons born about the 20th of January, April, July or October of past years, if compelled to be employed in underground places or about chemicals and machinery, have particular care in the last days of April for avoidance of harm from fire, accident or explosion.

25—Friday. The early part of the day is the best, though the afternoon is somewhat indifferent; one or some unusual mental and nervous unrest, or some kind will be noted at these times by close observers and the classes engaged in great literary works will be observed to be suffering unusual misfortunes and some persons noted in literary circles are likely to succumb under prevailing adverse conditions.

26—Saturday. Use the early morning hours for minor purchases of goods for trade, though articles of dress or decoration are best left unbought; do not court or marry on this day, particularly if acquaintance of parties is short. Better wait a while.

27—Sunday. The afternoon is best; the mind will be remarkably active and pupil utterances full of vigor and zeal; mental efforts in the evening will be effective and literary productions satisfactory.

28—Monday. Rise early and push all literary work and general correspondence with energy; seek favor at the hands of thine employer and crowd all honorable undertakings.

29—Tuesday. Give preference to the forenoon for pursuit of the elegant occupations, dealings in fancy goods, jewelry and all articles that please and gratify mankind; have no dealings in houses or lands in the afternoon which is less promising of good than the early hours.

30—Wednesday. The month closes with a very excitable and unfortunate day; keep out of contentions, engage no servants, do not travel needlessly, and be sure to "make haste slowly" in thy respective avocations; beware of giving offence to thine employer.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

HATS constructed entirely of tissue paper sounds unpracticable, but as a matter of fact they can be made in such a way as to stand the wear and tear of climate much better than those made of chiffon and tulle, which are worn nowadays on even the most ordinary occasions. The idea originated in the manual department of the public schools, where the girls are taught to braid tissue paper and to sew it together forming hats of various sizes and shapes. Out of this grew the fashion of making the paper hats form a part of the outfit of the children of the family, and this practical use of that which at first was only a plaything, became a really useful thing, and the fad grew, as such fads will grow, until few girls there are who do not possess at least one of these dainty creations. And it is not only confined to the children and girls, for the young lady sister does not scorn to wear them also.

These hats are built in exact imitation of the fashionable hats of the season. The tissue paper braided forms a very good imitation of the popular fancy braids, and if colors are harmoniously combined, a very pleasing effect is obtained. One distinct advantage in having these hats is that the cost is so slight that one may have a hat to wear with every suit, and it will be a great satisfaction to know that your hat cost only a few cents instead of several dollars. Tissue paper can be purchased for a penny a sheet, and from ten to twenty sheets are required for the hat according to the style.

TAM O'SHANTER.

The milliners complain that it is a great detriment to their trade. A down town milliner said to me the other day: "You would be surprised to know how much the paper hats are injuring my spring trade, especially in children and misses' hats;" and she added: "I am sure we will find the same difficulty all through the summer and even into the fall. Our hats are being copied by all the enterprising young people, and I cannot but admire the skill with which it is done. There is a copy of one of my spring hats now; just look at it and I will show you the original after she leaves the store." I looked and sure enough there was a dainty-looking lady wearing a hat in perfect imitation of one of Madame Armstrong's pattern hats. "She was in here the other day and examined this pattern hat," said Madam, "as I supposed with a view of buying it, but it seems that I was mistaken." It was really laughable to have such a timely illustration.

Our initial shows a picture of this selfsame hat. It is of black and dull red (old red) paper, two strands of black and one of red being braided for the foundation. The crown is high and very small, the brim very wide in front, with scarcely no brim at the back. Around as the milliner said, so "chic".

Another hat is of white tissue paper. It has a Tam O'Shanter crown, with a wide, full brim. The fullness of the brim is made by a constant widening of the crown. No wire is used. The only trimming is a band of turquoise blue paper drawn tightly around the crown, and a very large bow of the same shade directly in front.

One hat is made of dark brown paper. It has a broad flat crown, with a wide, drooping brim. Around the crown is a band of pale yellow paper. On the left side is a full blown yellow rose, and drooping carelessly on the brim, slightly lower, is a half open bud of a darker shade.

A dainty confection is shown in the Violet hat, and a proud young miss of fifteen is the artist who constructed it. It is made entirely in the violet shades, and the little blonde is a picture for an artist in it.

The hat is of the palest violet. It has a low crown and a wide brim after the "shed-roof" style. The crown runs into the broad, drooping brim. Carelessly strewn on it are large bunches of violets—also of paper—some of lighter and some of darker shades.

The last hat shown is perhaps the most graceful of any of the group. It is of light tan, has a very small, low crown, and a wide half drooping brim. Around the crown is drawn tightly a band of dark pink, and a large bow of the same shade is placed directly in front. On the brim across the front are carelessly arranged four large American Beauty roses. At the left side, near the back are two more roses. Among the roses green leaves are scattered. The stems are of paper twisted tight, no wire being used. This hat has a bandeau of pink and tan, so as to set the hat forward.

It is possible to copy any hat, but requires a certain amount of milliners' skill, or at least artistic taste. Many of the young ladies, taking the cue from "little sister," are constructing distracting affairs from this simple material.

To All Comfort Juveniles, Greeting.

PRIZES! PRIZES! PRIZES!!!

COMFORT believes that among its thousands of juvenile readers are many who have the gift of writing, and in order to develop this talent, not only for COMFORT's benefit but for the benefit of those possessing the gift, we propose a plan herewith in which all who will may take a hand and receive a share if his merit is equal to it.

Therefore we offer as the first subject for all COMFORT readers, not over twenty-one years of age, "George Washington," and we want essays on this best known of Americans, of from one hundred to two hundred words. That is, an essay may not be less than one hundred nor more than two hundred words in length, and each essay is to be the best the writer can produce of his own writing. The merit of the essay will depend, and be judged upon its originality, its correct English, its correct spelling, its correct punctuation, its correct capitalization and its clearness of language and proper presentation of the subject. Each of these points will count so many, so that in this way the youngest and least experienced writer may have an equal chance with the older writers, who are not so painstaking as their younger competitors. Boys and girls are to be considered equally.

In order to make it an inducement for our juveniles to enter the contest a prize of $2 will be offered for the best essay; $1 for the second best; 50 cents for the third, and a yearly subscription to COMFORT for the fourth. As there are COMFORT readers in every state and territory in the Union and in British America, the writers from each state, territory and country will constitute a class and the writers in those classes will only have their own class to contend against. This will make a wide distribution of prizes and enable writers everywhere to share in the benefits.

The winning essays, only, will be printed and announcements of winners will be made in the newspapers nearest the postoffices at which winners receive their COMFORTS, and prizes will be deposited with the postmasters at those offices.

The common term used when calling a cat, or fondling or caressing one, is the ancient Gaelic word and modern Irish name for the animal, which in those languages would be called a "puss." In English the hare is often called puss. The origin of the application of the name to so different an animal from that to which it legitimately belonged carries us back nearly to the time of the Norman Conquest of England, or about a thousand years. At that time, and for two or three generations afterwards, the fashionable language among the upper classes in England was a mixture of Latin and Norman-French. Amongst those who spoke pure Latin, the hare was called by its Latin name, lepus, which was perfectly correct. Others, probably, who spoke a jumble of both languages took the word to be Norman, and, supposing the first syllable to be the article le, converted lepus into lupus.
